

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

TOBY DOUGLAS, Director of the Department of Health
Care Services, State of California,
Petitioner,

v.

INDEPENDENT LIVING CENTER OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
INC., A Nonprofit Corporation,

TOBY DOUGLAS, Director of the Department of Health
Care Services, State of California,
Petitioner,

v.

CALIFORNIA PHARMACISTS ASSOCIATION, et al.,

TOBY DOUGLAS, Director of the Department of Health
Care Services, State of California,
Petitioner,

v.

SANTA ROSA MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, et al.,

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States
Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS AS AMICI
CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF RESPONDENTS

PAUL M. SMITH
Counsel of Record
MATTHEW S. HELLMAN
CAROLINE D. LOPEZ
JENNER & BLOCK LLP
1099 New York Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20001
(202) 639-6000
psmith@jenner.com

August 5, 2011

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF CONTENTSi

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES..... iii

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE..... 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT..... 2

ARGUMENT 5

I. Congress Has Relied On This Court’s Long Tradition Of Allowing Private Suits For Equitable Relief Under The Supremacy Clause..... 5

II. That Section 30A’s Obligations Arise Under The Spending Clause Makes Them More, Not Less, Suitable For Enforcement Under The Supremacy Clause..... 11

A. This Court Has Consistently Permitted Preemption Claims Seeking To Enforce Obligations Incurred Under The Spending Clause..... 12

B. A Remedy Under The Supremacy Clause Is Particularly Useful In Spending Clause Cases..... 13

C.	Congress Intends The Ultimate Beneficiaries Of Spending Clause Funds To Be Able To Obtain Equitable Relief When A State Fails To Comply With Its Obligations.....	16
III.	The History of Section 30A Demonstrates With Particular Clarity That Congress Did Not Intend To Foreclose Actions Under The Supremacy Clause.....	21
	CONCLUSION	24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Arizona Public Service Co. v. Snead , 441 U.S. 141 (1979).....	9
Arkansas Department of Health and Human Services v. Ahlborn , 547 U.S. 268 (2006).....	12
Barnett Bank of Marion County, N.A. v. Nelson , 517 U.S. 25 (1996)	9
Blum v. Bacon , 457 U.S. 132 (1982).....	12
California Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Guerra , 479 U.S. 272 (1987).....	9
City of Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. , 172 U.S. 1 (1898)	6
Cort v. Ash , 422 U.S. 66 (1975)	8
Crosby v. National Foreign Trade Council , 530 U.S. 363 (2000).....	6, 9
Dalton v. Little Rock Family Planning Services , 516 U.S. 474 (1996)	12
Douglas v. Seacoast Products, Inc. , 431 U.S. 265 (1977).....	9
Edelman v. Jordan , 415 U.S. 651 (1974).....	10
Florida Lime & Avocado Growers, Inc. v. Paul , 373 U.S. 132 (1963)	6
Gade v. National Solid Wastes Management Ass'n , 505 U.S. 88 (1992).....	9

Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles , 493 U.S. 103 (1989).....	9
Helvering v. Davis , 301 U.S. 619 (1937)	2
Itel Containers International Corp. v. Huddleston , 507 U.S. 60 (1993)	9
Jones v. Rath Packing Co. , 430 U.S. 519 (1977).....	9
Lawrence County v. Lead-Deadwood School District No. 40-1 , 469 U.S. 256 (1985)	12
Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly , 533 U.S. 525 (2001).....	9
Malone v. White Motor Corp. , 435 U.S. 497 (1978).....	9
Memphis Bank & Trust Co. v. Garner , 459 U.S. 392 (1983).....	9
Microsoft Corp. v. i4i Limited Partnership , 131 S. Ct. 2238 (2011).....	6
Northwest Central Pipeline Corp. v. State Corporation Commission of Kansas , 489 U.S. 493 (1989).....	9
Ohio Bureau of Employment Services v. Hodory , 431 U.S. 471 (1977)	9
Osborn v. Bank of the United States , 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 738 (1824)	6
Pennhurst State School & Hospital v. Halderman , 451 U.S. 1 (1981)	19, 20
PhRMA v. Walsh , 538 U.S. 644 (2003).....	4, 12

Puerto Rico Department of Consumer Affairs v. Isla Petroleum Corp. , 485 U.S. 495 (1988).....	9
Ray v. Atlantic Richfield Co. , 435 U.S. 151 (1978).....	9
Rosado v. Wyman , 397 U.S. 397 (1970)	13, 14
Scheidler v. National Organization for Women, Inc. , 537 U.S. 393 (2003).....	5
Shaw v. Delta Air Lines, Inc. , 463 U.S. 85 (1983).....	6
South Dakota v. Yankton Sioux Tribe , 522 U.S. 329 (1998).....	5
State v. Wilson , 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 164 (1812).....	6
United States v. County of Fresno , 429 U.S. 452 (1977).....	9
Verizon Maryland, Inc. v. Public Service Commission of Maryland , 535 U.S. 635 (2002).....	10
Wilder v. Virginia Hospital Ass'n , 496 U. S. 498 (1990).....	13, 21, 22
Ex parte Young , 209 U.S. 123 (1908)	9-10
STATUTES
6 U.S.C. § 134.....	8
29 U.S.C. § 1144(b)(2)(A)	8
Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-193, 110 Stat. 2105	22

Pub. L. No. 105-33, § 4711(a), 111 Stat. 251..... 22

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS

H.R. 2491, 104th Cong. (1995)..... 22

H.R. REP. NO. 105-149 (1997) 23

Governors' Perspective on Medicaid, Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Finance, 105th Cong. (1997) 23

Medicaid Reform: The Governors' View,
Hearing Before Subcommittee on Health and Environment of the House Committee on Energy & Commerce,
105th Cong. (1997)..... 23

S. 1956, 104th Cong. (1996)..... 22

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Brief for the United States as Amicus
Curiae, California Department of Human Resources Development v. Java,
402 U.S. 121 (1971) (No. 70-507), 1971
WL 147066 8

Brief for the United States as Amicus
Curiae, California Division of Labor
Standards Enforcement v. Dillingham
Construction, N.A., Inc., 519 U.S. 316
(1997) (No. 95-789), 1996 WL 340772..... 7

Brief for the United States as Amicus
Curiae, Carleson v. Remillard, 406 U.S.
598 (1972) (No. 70-250), 1971 WL
1333367 7

Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Crosby v. National Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363 (2000) (No. 99-474), 2000 WL 194805 7

Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, District of Columbia v. Greater Washington Board of Trade, 506 U.S. 125 (1992) (No. 91-1326), 1992 WL 12012049 7

Ann Devroy & Eric Pianin, Clinton Vetoes GOP's 7-year Balanced Budget Plan, WASH. POST, Dec. 7, 1995, at A1 22

Jennifer Suttle, Cong. Research Serv., CRS Report for Congress: Balanced Budget Act of 1995: A Legislative History and Brief Summary of H.R. 2491 (1996)..... 22

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Amici, Representative Henry A. Waxman, Senator Max Baucus, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, Representative George Miller, Senator Tom Harkin, and Representative Sander M. Levin, are a group of current Members of Congress who support private rights of action for equitable relief in this context.¹ The personal experiences of amici, as Members of Congress who have worked extensively on legislation and oversight of Federal health programs, including those authorized under Titles XVIII (Medicare) and XIX (Medicaid) of the Social Security Act, provide insight into Congress' intent to preserve prospective relief to vindicate the supremacy of the Medicaid Act over contrary state legislation. Amici are uniquely situated to do so.

Amici support the argument of Respondents that Congress intended to preserve the private cause of action for equitable relief to vindicate the supremacy of Medicaid conditions over contrary state action. Amici explain that Congress relied on this Court's longstanding practice of hearing these causes of action, except where statutes expressly barred them. In contrast, the approach suggested by California and the Solicitor General would upend centuries of settled understanding and would undermine the effectiveness of Medicaid. Amici believe that such suits are critical here to protect the intended beneficiaries of Medicaid – the Medicaid recipients. Allowing for prospective relief in this narrow context supplements the agency’s limited enforcement resources, and can be a more effective measure than using administrative means to cut off federal funding to the program. Because Section 30A is no different than any of the dozens of other Congressional enactments that this Court has allowed to be enforced through the Supremacy Clause, the judgment below should be affirmed.

¹ No person or entity other than amici and their counsel made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief. Counsel of record for the parties have consented to the filing of this brief, and letter of consent have been filed with the clerk.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Nearly 75 years ago Justice Cardozo set forth the basic principle that when “[federal] money is spent to promote the general welfare, the concept of welfare or the opposite is shaped by Congress, not the states.” Helvering v. Davis, 301 U.S. 619, 645 (1937). This case implicates not only that venerable principle, but one of even older vintage: the right to seek equitable relief under the Supremacy Clause against state law that is inconsistent with Congressional enactments.

In the posture this case comes to the Court, it is undisputed that California has not complied with its obligations to fund the Medicaid program that Congress enacted and that California agreed to administer. It is equally undisputed that for nearly 200 years, this Court has heard claims under the Supremacy Clause seeking prospective relief based on preemption of inconsistent state law without ever requiring an express cause of action from Congress to do so.

Now California, joined by the Solicitor General, asks this Court to hold for the first time that Section 30A is not enforceable in a private suit seeking equitable relief. This Court should reject that position for four reasons.

First, Congress has relied on this Court's unbroken practice of permitting suits for equitable relief under the Supremacy Clause. Congress is fully capable of stating when it does not want to allow a private cause of action. And it is fully capable of stating when it does not want an enactment to be construed as displacing state law. But when Congress does not so state, it has long understood that an action for equitable relief will be available to individuals harmed by state law that is inconsistent with federal law. California's broad argument that such relief is available only when Congress has provided an express cause of action is irreconcilable with the many cases from this Court allowing such relief without ever requiring the plaintiff to identify a right of action. And it is also irreconcilable with this Court's practice of presuming that equitable relief is available under Ex parte Young unless Congress affirmatively indicates otherwise. See infra Part I.

Second, the efforts of California and the Solicitor General to distinguish Section 30A on the ground that it imposes obligations under the Spending Clause are unavailing. This Court has routinely allowed Supremacy Clause actions to enforce obligations incurred under the Spending Clause. Indeed, this Court not long ago affirmed the availability of that very relief in a case in which the plaintiffs argued that state regulation was preempted by Medicaid. See PhRMA v. Walsh, 538 U.S. 644, 662-74 (2003). But more than that, the Spending Clause context provides greater reason, not less, to allow preemption actions. California and the Solicitor General assert that the proper remedy here is for the United States to cut off funding to a state that does not comply with its Medicaid obligations. But that would only dramatically exacerbate the problems of Medicaid recipients in California. In contrast, allowing private attorneys general to supplement the agency's enforcement powers provides a remedy that is consistent with Congress's goals and vindicates the supremacy of federal law. See infra Part II.A &B.

Third, California and the Solicitor General are wrong when they contend that a preemption claim is improper here because Respondents are seeking a benefit rather than invoking an immunity. When a state receives federal funds, Congress is equally concerned that a state comply with all the conditions attached to those funds, whether they be a limitation on how a state may regulate, or an obligation to provide a certain standard of benefits. See infra Part II.C.

Fourth, the argument that there is no right to enforce Section 30A under the Supremacy Clause is particularly weak because Congress has repeatedly debated whether to eliminate Section 30A and/or bar private rights of action, and it has consistently refused to do so, even as it has eliminated other rights-giving provisions in Medicaid. See infra Part III. Congress has expressly chosen to maintain Section 30A knowing full well that it provides enforceable rights. This Court should not override that decision, particularly when doing so would require overturning two centuries of case law.

ARGUMENT

I. CONGRESS HAS RELIED ON THIS COURT'S LONG TRADITION OF ALLOWING PRIVATE SUITS FOR EQUITABLE RELIEF UNDER THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE.

When Congress legislates, it does so with an understanding of the legal principles that will govern the interpretation of what it enacts. Amici can attest to the truth of that statement based on their extensive legislative experience. And it is correct as well as a matter of law under this Court's well-settled doctrines. See, e.g., South Dakota v. Yankton Sioux Tribe, 522 U.S. 329, 351 (1998) ("We assume that Congress is aware of existing law when it passes legislation.") (quoting Miles v. Apex Marine Corp., 498 U.S. 19, 32, (1990)). For example, when Congress uses terms drawn from the common law, this Court understands that usage indicates Congress's intent to incorporate the terms' common law gloss. E.g. Scheidler v. Nat'l Org. for Women, Inc., 537 U.S. 393, 402 (2003). Likewise, when Congress chooses not to amend a statute in the face of a judicial construction, it can be presumed to have acceded to the interpretation this Court articulated.

E.g., Microsoft Corp. v. i4i Ltd. P'ship, 131 S. Ct. 2238, 2252 (2011).

The question in this case is whether Congress intended to allow suits under the Supremacy Clause to remedy state law inconsistent with the obligations imposed by Section 30A of the Medicaid Act. And for 200 years this Court's decisions have indicated that such relief is available to vindicate the supremacy of federal law in the absence of an express provision to the contrary. The line of authority establishing this proposition encompasses some of this Court's most seminal cases, both longstanding and of more recent vintage, concerning the preeminence of federal authority. See, e.g., State v. Wilson, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 164, 166 (1812) (suit initially brought in state court challenging state tax as unconstitutional under Contracts Clause); Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 738 (1824) (suit to enjoin state tax as unconstitutional under Congress's Article I power to constitute Bank of United States); City of Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 172 U.S. 1 (1898) (finding tax unconstitutional after considering only whether the Court had jurisdiction); Fla. Lime & Avocado Growers, Inc. v. Paul, 373 U.S. 132 (1963) (exercising jurisdiction over private party claim that California statute was preempted by federal regulation); Shaw v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 463 U.S. 85, 96 n.14 (1983) (enjoining state law preempted by ERISA); Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363, 366 (2000) (enjoining state law restricting purchases from Burma on preemption grounds).

Congress's understanding that equitable relief is available under the Supremacy Clause has been bolstered by the consistent (until now) position taken by the Executive Branch on this issue. Although the Solicitor General now contends that it is unclear "if ... a private party can bring a federal nonstatutory cause of action for equitable relief ... on preemption grounds," SG Br. at 16, the Executive has routinely appeared in such cases in favor of federal preemption, seeking the benefit of these private suits to vindicate the supremacy of federal law. See, e.g., Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363 (2000) (No. 99-474), 2000 WL 194805; Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, District of Columbia v. Greater Washington Bd. of Trade, 506 U.S. 125 (1992) (No. 91-1326), 1992 WL 12012049 (filing on behalf of private plaintiffs seeking declaratory judgment that state law is preempted by ERISA).

Indeed, even when the Solicitor General has argued that the state law was not preempted by federal law – thus arguing against private plaintiffs' interest – the Executive never suggested the plaintiffs' lack of a cause of action. See, e.g., Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Cal. Div. of Labor Standards Enforcement v. Dillingham Constr., N.A., Inc., 519 U.S. 316 (1997) (No. 95-789), 1996 WL 340772 (arguing against federal preemption where plaintiffs sought declaratory judgment that ERISA preempted state enforcement action, but failing to raise cause of action question); Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Carleson v. Remillard, 406 U.S. 598 (1971) (No. 70-250), 1971 WL 133367 (opposing private plaintiffs on Social Security Act preemption of state welfare regulation, but not addressing cause of action); Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Cal. Dep't of Human Res. Dev. v. Java, 402 U.S. 121 (1971) (No. 70-507), 1971 WL 147066 (same).

Put simply, Congress is fully capable of saying when it does not wish to provide a cause of action to individuals. See, e.g., 6 U.S.C. § 134 (“Nothing in this part may be construed to create a private right of action . . .”). Congress is also fully capable of stating when federal law is not intended to preempt state regulation. See, e.g., 29 U.S.C. § 1144(b)(2)(A) (“[N]othing in this subchapter shall be construed to exempt or relieve any person from any law of any State which regulates insurance . . .”). But when Congress imposes obligations that do not contain limiting language of that sort, it relies on this Court’s venerable practice of permitting suits to enjoin state laws that are preempted by federal law.

Against this background, it is thus remarkable that California’s lead argument is that Section 30A’s absence of an express right of action signifies that Congress “intended” to foreclose relief under the Supremacy Clause. Pet’r Br. 20-33. This Court has never required an express cause of action in its Supremacy Clause cases. To the contrary, this Court has remained steadfastly open to suits for purely prospective relief as a critical but limited safeguard, even while becoming more guarded against suits that seek monetary relief. For example, since this Court held in Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 (1975), that it would apply a more stringent test for implying rights of action in federal statutes, there have been no fewer than nine cases in which this Court has upheld injunctive relief under the Supremacy Clause.² See, e.g., Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525 (2001); Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363 (2000); Barnett Bank of Marion Cnty., N.A. v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25 (1996); Gade v. Nat'l Solid Wastes Mgmt. Ass'n, 505 U.S. 88 (1992); Memphis Bank & Trust Co. v. Garner, 459 U.S. 392 (1983); Ariz. Pub. Serv. Co. v. Snead, 441 U.S. 141 (1979); Ray v. Atl. Richfield Co., 435 U.S. 151 (1978); Douglas v. Seacoast Prods., Inc., 431 U.S. 265 (1977); Jones v. Rath Packing Co., 430 U.S. 519 (1977); see also Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, 493 U.S. 103, 119 (1989) (even where Section 1983 relief is unavailable, “plaintiffs may vindicate [their] pre-emption claims by seeking declaratory and equitable relief in federal district courts through their powers under federal jurisdictional statutes”) (Kennedy, J., dissenting).

Instead, a comparison to the Ex parte Young doctrine is highly pertinent. See Ex parte Young, ² During that period there were also at least seven such cases in which this Court found that injunctive relief was unwarranted. See, e.g., ITEL Containers Int'l Corp. v. Huddleston, 507 U.S. 60 (1993); Northwest Cent. Pipeline Corp. v. State Corp. Comm'n of Kan., 489 U.S. 493 (1989); Puerto Rico Dep't of Consumer Affairs v. Isla Petroleum Corp., 485 U.S. 495 (1988); Cal. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Guerra, 479 U.S. 272 (1987); Malone v. White Motor Corp., 435 U.S. 497 (1978); Ohio Bureau of Empl. Servs. v. Hodory, 431 U.S. 471 (1977); United States v. County of Fresno, 429 U.S. 452 (1977). In not one of those cases did the Court express doubt about the existence of a cause of action in the first place.

209 U.S. 123 (1908). Far from requiring an express authorization to pursue injunctive relief under Ex parte Young, this Court presumes that Congress intends such relief to be available absent a clear indication by Congress to the contrary. E.g., Verizon Md., Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of Md., 535 U.S. 635, 647 (2002) (allowing plaintiff to pursue relief under Ex parte Young because statute did not “display any intent to foreclose” that relief).

California and the Solicitor General apparently recognize this anomaly, and indeed the Solicitor General concedes in a footnote late in its brief that it “is not suggesting that Congress has ‘displayed an intent not to provide the more complete and more immediate relief that would otherwise be available under Ex parte Young.’” SG Br. 32 n.12 (quoting Verizon, 535 U.S. at 647) (internal quotation marks omitted). Despite this concession, the Solicitor General appears to contend Ex parte Young is not relevant here because “[s]ome have described Young” as permitting only a “defens[ive]” action to prevent a state from bringing its own punitive action against the Young plaintiff. SG Br. at 19. Accord Pet’r Br. at 41. But Ex parte Young is not so limited. Such suits may be brought to compel state action required by federal law, and not just to enjoin punitive action. In the highly analogous case of Edelman v. Jordan, for example, this Court explained that Ex parte Young could be used to compel state officials to comply with the federal time limits for processing and paying applicants for a federal-state aid program on a prospective basis. 415 U.S. 651, 655-56, 664-66 & n.11 (1974). The availability of injunctive relief was presumed there, even though the Court made no mention of any private right of action. The same result should hold here.

Accordingly, because this Court has never required an express cause of action to seek preemption under the Supremacy Clause, and indeed has consistently presumed that such relief would always be available under Ex parte Young, this Court should not disrupt Congress's expectations by ruling that Section 30A does not permit private enforcement under Supremacy Clause just because Congress did not provide an express right of action to do so.

II. THAT SECTION 30A'S OBLIGATIONS ARISE UNDER THE SPENDING CLAUSE MAKES THEM MORE, NOT LESS, SUITABLE FOR ENFORCEMENT UNDER THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE.

California and the Solicitor General contend that because Section 30A's obligations arise under Congress's Spending Clause authority they are inappropriate for enforcement through the Supremacy Clause. From amici's perspective, that conclusion does not follow. When a state or local entity agrees to accept federal funds, it is obligated to use those funds in the manner required by Congress and to comply with any and all conditions put on the funds. As we explain, allowing such suits both comports with this Court's past practice and with common sense.

A. This Court Has Consistently Permitted Preemption Claims Seeking To Enforce Obligations Incurred Under The Spending Clause.

At the outset, it is important to recognize that notwithstanding the assertions of California and the Solicitor General, this Court has never treated Spending Clause obligations differently in allowing claims to proceed under the Supremacy Clause. When Congress exercises its Spending Clause powers, inconsistent state law must give way under the Supremacy Clause, just as it must to any other enactment of Congress. See, e.g., Lawrence Cnty. v. Lead-Deadwood Sch. Dist. No. 40-1, 469 U.S. 256, 258 (1985) (holding that the Payment in Lieu of Taxes Act preempted state rules mandating how local governments used the moneys); Blum v. Bacon, 457 U.S. 132, 138 (1982) (holding that federal regulations pursuant to the Emergency Assistance Program, which is federally funded under the Social Security Act, preempted state provisions regarding emergency assistance).

Indeed, this Court has heard numerous preemption challenges to state law under Medicaid itself. See Ark. Dep't of Health & Human Servs. v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 279-80 (2006) (holding that Medicaid preempted state laws regarding liens on settlement agreements); PhRMA, 538 U.S. at 662-74 (examining whether a preliminary injunction was appropriate where state action was allegedly preempted by Medicaid); Dalton v. Little Rock Family Planning Servs., 516 U.S. 474, 475 (1996) (per curiam) (discussing proper scope of injunctive relief while declining to grant certification on the question whether the Hyde Amendment preempted contrary state laws).

B. A Remedy Under The Supremacy Clause Is Particularly Useful In Spending Clause Cases.

Despite the many cases allowing Spending Clause challenges, California and the Solicitor General argue that the only proper remedy is for the federal government to withhold funds from states that fail to comply with relevant federal law. Having reserved to the federal government the remedy of cutting off Medicaid funds (the argument goes), Congress must not have intended that the ultimate beneficiaries of those funds be able to sue when states take action inconsistent with federal law.

That argument turns the purpose of Medicaid on its head. Medicaid is a federal program “through which the Federal Government provides financial assistance to States so that they may furnish medical care to needy individuals.” Wilder v. Va. Hosp. Ass’n, 496 U. S. 498, 502 (1990). Withholding federal funding would make it even less likely that those “needy individuals” would receive the medical care a state agreed to provide.

This Court considered a similar situation in Rosado v. Wyman, where it heard a lawsuit by individuals who received benefit payments from New York as part of Congress’s Federal Aid To Families with Dependent Children program. 397 U.S. 397 (1970). The petitioner claimed that New York’s method of distributing the benefits violated the terms on which the federal government provided the funds to New York. Id. at 399. In holding that the petitioner had a right to proceed (and prevail), Justice Harlan wrote for the Court:

We have considered and rejected the argument that a federal court is without power to review state welfare provisions or prohibit the use of federal funds by the States in view of the fact that Congress has lodged in the Department of HEW the power to cut off federal funds for noncompliance with statutory requirements. We are most reluctant to assume Congress has closed the avenue of effective judicial review to those individuals most directly affected by the administration of its program.

Id. at 420 (emphasis added).

So too here. Far from being unnecessary in Spending Clause cases, allowing for private attorneys general in this context is particularly useful to Congress. As the Solicitor General recognized in opposing certiorari in this case, “[a] system that relies solely on agency review may often be less effective in ensuring the supremacy of federal law than a system of agency review supplemented by private enforcement.” SG Cert. Br. 19. Allowing for private enforcement provides a middle ground between doing nothing and cutting off funding. See id. (citing Cannon v. Univ. of Chi., 441 U.S. 677, 705 (1979)). It assists executive agencies that may lack the resources to enforce in every individual case the obligations Congress imposes. It offers an alternate avenue of relief to the months and even years of delay between when a state implements cuts and when the agency completes its review.³ It provides some assurance that Congress's objectives will be realized even during administrations that may have different enforcement priorities. And in this case in particular, it provides impoverished Medicaid patients and the medical providers who serve them a means of redress in the court system that they would often not have in the political battles over budget cuts.

Put another way, there is no reason to think that Congress would have limited enforcement of Medicaid obligations to a remedy that would terminate those obligations. California has been accepting more than $20 billion in federal Medicaid funds per year in exchange for its promise, among other things, to ensure that needy patients had access to health care. Congress authorized the expenditure of those funds because it found that they would serve important public interests. That California has failed to adhere to its obligations is a reason to compel it do so, not a reason to abandon those interests by cutting off the program.

³ The delays in this case illustrate the problem. California waited until three months after it began cutting funds to submit its proposal to HHS. 09-958 Intervenor Resp. Br. 6. Two months after this submission, HHS requested that California submit additional information within 90 days. Id. The Secretary finally disapproved the plan twenty months after California failed to provide a response. Id. Currently, California is seeking reconsideration of this decision. Id. at 7. During this lengthy process, California has continued to implement the cuts except to the extent that it has been enjoined from doing so by the federal courts. Id.

C. Congress Intends The Ultimate Beneficiaries Of Spending Clause Funds To Be Able To Obtain Equitable Relief When A State Fails To Comply With Its Obligations.

California and the Solicitor General also offer a cluster of arguments based on the fact that Respondents are not directly regulated by Section 30A, and instead receive their benefits from the state. Pet'r Br. at 46-48; SG Br. 16-24. These arguments are offered in an apparent attempt to distinguish this case from the many others allowing relief under the Supremacy Clause, but they have no bearing on what Congress should be presumed to have intended.

The Solicitor General, for example, emphasizes that Section 30A does not regulate respondents' "primary conduct," and that respondents are seeking a benefit promised by federal law rather than an "immunity" from state regulation. SG Br. at 22. California goes even further and contends that "[p]rinciples of supremacy, and of preemption generally, have no application to allegations that a state has failed to satisfy a federal funding condition." Pet'r Br. at 46.

But legislation, including Spending Clause legislation, may bestow benefits or provide immunities, and in both cases Congress intends that those provisions be followed.⁴ A state is no more free to withhold a benefit it agreed to bestow as a condition of taking a grant of federal funds than it is to violate the restrictive conditions attached to those funds.

This Court's recent decision in PhRMA v. Walsh is instructive. In PhRMA, a drug company trade association sought injunctive relief against a state that had imposed certain requirements on drug companies. The trade association argued that the state's program was inconsistent with the obligations it undertook as a condition of receiving Medicaid funds, and therefore preempted by federal law. The Solicitor General filed an amicus brief in favor of preemption, and only two members of the Court expressed any doubt that a private cause of action was permissible in that context.

California does not mention the PhRMA case even though it was central to the reasoning of the Court of Appeals. 10-283 Pet. App. 77-83. The Solicitor General acknowledges that PhRMA "could arguably be described as similar” to this case, but contends that it is distinguishable because “[t]he question in PhRMA was not whether the State had complied with obligations imposed on it as a condition of receiving federal Medicaid funds, but whether the State’s use of Medicaid authority as a tool to impose [restrictions] on drug manufacturers ... was consistent with the Medicaid statute.” SG Br. at 22, 24. But again, there is no reason to think that Congress would be more inclined to allow a state to fail to comply with “obligations imposed on it as a condition of receiving federal funds” than it would to allow a state to impose restrictions inconsistent with those obligations.

⁴ For example, California simply does not address and the Solicitor General has great difficulty in explaining how this distinction works in light of this Court's decision in Crosby. See SG Br. 23 n.8. In attempting to classify Crosby as involving a "defense," the Solicitor General construes the deprivation of a benefit in that case—eligibility to be awarded a state contract—as a burden—the "exercise of the State's authority to impose and enforce what were essentially state regulatory standards." Id. But that simply collapses the purported distinction between denying benefits and imposing burdens, and demonstrates that the distinction cannot separate permissible Supremacy Clause claims from impermissible ones.

California and the Solicitor General also advert to contract analogies and contend that because the states are the direct recipients of the federal funds, the respondents in this case are reduced to third-party beneficiaries who have no right to sue to enforce compliance with the “contract.” SG Br. at 25-26.

Amici respectfully disagree with this characterization. To be sure, the states are critical partners in providing care under Medicaid. But they are not the intended beneficiaries of Medicaid. Medicaid’s purpose is to ensure that poor people also have access to basic medical care by guaranteeing payment to medical providers for serving this vulnerable population. And when a state fails to live up to its responsibilities to these beneficiaries, Congress intended to preserve the private cause of action for injunctive relief under the Supremacy Clause as a limited but critical safeguard for these beneficiaries.

This Court's decision in Pennhurst State School & Hospital v. Halderman, 451 U.S. 1 (1981), supports a cause of action along precisely these lines, contrary to California's and the Solicitor General's reading of the case. Pet'r Br. 18, 46-48; SG Br. 27. Although this Court determined that the federal statute at issue did not create substantive rights to monetary relief or "appropriate' treatment in the 'least restrictive' environment," 451 U.S. at 11, 29, this Court left open the possibility of injunctive relief. The majority explained that they would not "significantly differ" from (dissenting) Justice White's proposed remedy if the district court were to find on remand that the state had failed to comply with "federally imposed conditions," id. at 30 n.23. In turn, Justice White's dissent made clear that the only distinctive aspect of private suits under Spending Clause statutes seeking to vindicate the Supremacy Clause is the scope of the appropriate injunctive relief. Id. at 53-54 (White, J., dissenting). Justice White explained that such injunctions "cannot survive the State's decision to terminate its participation in the program." Id. This distinction matches the scope of the remedy to the contours of the preemption in these cases, which stretches only as far as the state's acceptance of federal funding. It comes into play after a determination on the merits; it certainly does not serve as a threshold bar to suit.⁵

⁵ To the extent the majority opinion can be read to limit the remedy to offering the State a choice between assuming the

Nor are California and the Solicitor General correct to argue that the “broad and non-specific” nature of the obligations imposed by Section 30A makes them inappropriate for an action seeking preemption. In the first place, this critique goes not to whether a cause of action exists in the first place, but to the scope of judicial relief available. This Court expressly limited the question presented in this case only to the first issue, and thus the second is not presented here.

Moreover, as the Solicitor General concedes, Section 30A’s standards are enforceable in a judicial action where a State disagrees with the Secretary’s disapproval of a State plan or amendment. See SG Br. at 31. If they are discernable in that context, it is difficult to see how they are unenforceable in the context of a private suit. Any remaining concerns about the need for agency input should be allayed by HHS’s commitment “to conducting a rulemaking proceeding over the next year that will result in an authoritative interpretation of Section 1396a(a)(30)(A).” See SG Cert. Br. 8. As always, the agency’s own interpretation will trump an inconsistent interpretation by a private party. See id. at 19 (citing Nat’l Cable & Telecomms. Ass’n v. Brand X Internet Servs., 545 U.S. 967, 983 (2005)).

additional cost of compliance or not using federal funds, see id. at 29, that is a question as to the scope of the remedy, not the right to seek relief in the first place. In any case, the majority’s position is entirely consistent with the dissent’s explanation that courts can only prospectively compel states to abide by federal conditions so long as the state continues to accept funding. See id. at 53-54 (White, J., dissenting).

III. THE HISTORY OF SECTION 30A DEMONSTRATES WITH PARTICULAR
CLARITY THAT CONGRESS DID NOT INTEND TO FORECLOSE ACTIONS UNDER THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE.

That Petitioner and the Solicitor General would argue that Section 30A should be the first statutory provision ever to be found not to allow an action under the Supremacy Clause is particularly odd because the history of that provision demonstrates that Congress consciously chose not to limit its means of enforcement.

Section 30A in its current form dates back to 1989, and in the last 15 years it has been the subject of repeated, but unsuccessful, efforts in Congress to restrict private rights of action. These efforts stemmed from an earlier decision by this Court, Wilder, 496 U.S. at 509-10, which held that language similar to Section 30A, known as the “Boren Amendment” was enforceable under Section 1983.⁶

⁶ The Boren Amendment provided that a State plan for medical assistance must ... provide ... for payment ... of the hospital services, nursing facility services, and services in an intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded provided under the plan through the use of rates (determined in accordance with methods and standard developed by the State ...) which the State finds, and makes assurances satisfactory to the Secretary, are reasonable and adequate to meet the costs which must be incurred by efficiently and economically operated facilities in order to provide care and services in conformity with applicable

Congress responded to this holding by considering whether to bar all private actions to enforce a state's payment rates under Medicaid, including those under Section 30A. For example, in 1995, the President vetoed Congress' attempt to prohibit any "cause of action" to enforce a state's payment rates under Medicaid, H.R. 2491, 104th Cong. § 7002(b)(4) (1995).⁷ Congress did not attempt to override this veto. See Jennifer Suttle, Cong. Research Serv., CRS Report for Congress: Balanced Budget Act of 1995: A Legislative History and Brief Summary of H.R. 2491 CRS-8 (1996). In 1996, the Senate initially attempted to bar private suits again, but Congress ultimately enacted a statute without any such provision. Compare S. 1956, 104th Cong. § 1508 (1996) and Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-193, 110 Stat. 2105.

Congress ultimately repealed the Boren Amendment in 1997, Pub. L. No. 105-33, § 4711(a), 111 Stat. 251, but it did not repeal Section 30A, nor did it add language restricting causes of action. This was no oversight. At the same hearing in which

State and Federal laws, regulations, and quality and safety standards and to assure that individuals eligible for medical assistance have reasonable access . . . to inpatient hospital services of adequate quality.

496 U.S. at 502-03 (emphasis added) (ellipses in original) (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(13)(A) (1990)).

⁷ President Clinton vetoed H.R. 2491 on December 6, 1995. Ann Devroy & Eric Pianin, Clinton Vetoes GOP's 7-year Balanced Budget Plan, WASH. POST, Dec. 7, 1995, at A1.

Congress heard criticism of the Boren Amendment, some witnesses also criticized litigation under Section 30A, which they deemed a “Boren-like” provision, see Medicaid Reform: The Governors’ View, Hearing of the H. Comm. on Commerce, Subcomm. on Health and Env’t, 105th Cong. 21 (1997) (prepared statement of Govs. Bob Miller and Michael O. Leavitt); Governors’ Perspective on Medicaid, Hearing Before the S. Comm. on Fin., 105th Cong. 37 (1997) (prepared statement of Govs. Bob Miller and Michael O. Leavitt).

California emphasizes that the accompanying report of the House Committee on the Budget stated that “[i]t is the Committee’s intention that, following enactment of this Act, neither this nor any other provision of Section 1902 [the section containing Section 30A] will be interpreted as establishing a cause of action for hospitals and nursing facilities relative to the adequacy of the rates they receive.” H.R. REP. NO. 105-149, at 591 (1997). But that report language does not track the actual text of the statute, which contains no prohibition of causes of action, and does not repeal Section 30A. And of course, it is the text of the statute that must prevail over a contrary passage of legislative history.

Congress remains free to amend the Medicaid statute to limit relief, shape relief, or to prohibit private causes of action altogether as Congress has done in other contexts when necessary. But there is nothing about Section 30A that makes it different from any of the other federal enactments that this Court has permitted to be enforced under the Supremacy Clause. California agreed to provide a certain standard of benefits as a condition of receiving federal funds, and consistent with this Court's precedents, it is subject to equitable action if it fails to comply with those conditions.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Ninth Circuit should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

PAUL M. SMITH

Counsel of Record

MATTHEW S. HELLMAN

CAROLINE D. LOPEZ

JENNER & BLOCK LLP

1099 New York Avenue, NW

Washington, DC 20001

(202) 639-6000

psmith@jenner.com

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

August 5, 2011