PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Over twenty years ago, petitioner Franchise Tax Board of the State of California (FTB), the California state agency charged with collecting California income taxes, audited respondent Gilbert P. Hyatt and determined that he had falsely disclaimed his California residency in order to avoid substantial state income taxes. Rather than simply exercise his right to challenge FTB's assessment via administrative review followed by suit in California state court, Hyatt also sued FTB in Nevada state court, alleging that FTB committed various intentional torts in conducting its audits. Hyatt's suit dragged California through ten years of litigation—including a previous trip to this Court—before it finally reached trial. There, a Nevada jury demonstrated the dangers of allowing a sovereign State to be haled into another State's court system against its will by finding for Hyatt on every one of his claims and awarding Hyatt $490 million in damages. Another six years passed before the Nevada Supreme Court, while trimming the award, affirmed that FTB is liable for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress and must pay Hyatt over a million dollars in damages, with potentially millions more to come. In the process, the Nevada Supreme Court deepened splits on important federal issues and expressly declined to extend to California the same immunities Nevada enjoys in its own courts.

This extraordinary case demands the Court's review for a second time because the judgment below contravenes sovereign immunity principles three times over. First, the Nevada Supreme Court held that the federal discretionary-function immunity rule, 28 U.S.C. §2680(a), which applies in Nevada courts, is categorically inapplicable to intentional torts and bad-faith conduct. That conclusion squarely conflicts with the decisions of numerous federal circuits holding that subjective intent is irrelevant to discretionary-function immunity and, therefore, such immunity can apply even to intentional torts and bad-faith conduct.

Second, the court ignored this Court's previous decision in this case by declining to extend to a sister sovereign the same immunities Nevada enjoys in its own courts. If the Court persists in the view that a sovereign State can be haled into the courts of another State against its will (but see infra), then it is imperative that the foreign sovereign receive the same immunities as the domestic sovereign, as this Court indicated in its earlier decision. Nonetheless, the Nevada Supreme Court refused to apply a statutory cap on compensatory damages applicable to Nevada agencies, on the remarkably candid ground that extending the rule to a California agency would undermine the interest in compensating Nevadans without any corresponding benefit to Nevada and its taxpayers. That determination denies California its dignity as a co-equal sovereign and cannot be squared with basic principles of sovereign immunity, cooperative federalism, or the Full Faith and Credit Clause.

Third, the proceedings in this case amply demonstrate that this Court took a wrong turn in Nevada v. Hall, 440 U.S. 410 (1979). Bedrock principles of sovereign immunity dating back to the Framing make clear that a sovereign State cannot be haled into a sister State's court system absent its consent. Moreover, this Court's cases recognize that a State generally may not be haled into federal court absent its consent, and all the same justifications apply a fortiori in the sister State context. Nevada v. Hall was decided before many of the Court's modern sovereign immunity cases, and it is incompatible with those later, better reasoned cases. Indeed, this case amply demonstrates the problems with allowing one sovereign to be sued in the courts of a different sovereign absent consent. A Nevada jury with an opportunity to award damages to a Nevada citizen at the expense of a California governmental entity did so to the tune of half a billion dollars. Although the Nevada Supreme Court eventually trimmed that award back half a decade later, it expressly refused to apply the immunities available to a Nevada state agency. These facts illustrate exactly why sovereign immunity does not allow a sovereign State to be placed at the mercy of foreign juries and judges absent consent. In short, this case presents a perfect vehicle for this Court to correct two certworthy errors made by the court below or one of its own, viz., Nevada v. Hall.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Nevada Supreme Court is reported at 335 P.3d 125 and reproduced at App.1-73. The order of the Nevada Supreme Court denying rehearing is unreported and reproduced at App.74-75. The relevant orders of the state trial court are unreported, but reproduced at App.78-81.

JURISDICTION

The Nevada Supreme Court issued its opinion on September 18, 2014, and denied rehearing on November 25, 2014. On January 13, 2015, Justice Kennedy extended the time within which to file a petition for a writ of certiorari to and including March 23, 2015. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1257(a). See Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn, 420 U.S. 469 (1975).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Article IV, §1 of the United States Constitution and 28 U.S.C. §2680(a) are reproduced at App.82-83.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Factual Background

Hyatt is a former resident of the State of California who has earned hundreds of millions of dollars in licensing fees on certain technology patents he once owned. App.4; Franchise Tax Bd. of Cal. v. Hyatt (Hyatt I), 538 U.S. 488, 490-91 (2003). Hyatt filed a “part-year” resident income tax return in California for the year 1991, claiming that as of October 1, 1991, he had ceased to be a California resident and had become a resident of Nevada. Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 490. Within days after that purported move, Hyatt received substantial patent licensing fees that he did not report on his California tax return. App.4. Although Hyatt represented that he had lived in California for three-quarters of 1991, he reported only 3.5% of his total taxable income on his California return. And despite his supposed change of residence, Hyatt claimed no moving expenses on his California return. Id.

Based on these discrepancies, FTB opened an audit into Hyatt's 1991 California return. FTB concluded that Hyatt did not move from California to Nevada before October 1991, as he had claimed, but rather remained a California resident until April 1992. App.4-5. It determined that, "in an effort to avoid [California] state income tax liability on his patent licensing," Hyatt "had staged the earlier move to Nevada by renting an apartment, obtaining a driver's license, insurance, bank account, and registering to vote." App.6. It further determined that although Hyatt claimed he had sold his California home to his work assistant, the purported sale was a sham. Id. FTB provided a "detailed explanation" of its conclusions, complete with evidence. It determined that Hyatt owed California approximately $1.8 million in unpaid state income taxes from 1991, plus an additional $2.6 million in penalties and interest. Id. Because it determined that Hyatt resided in California for part of 1992 yet paid no California taxes at all, FTB opened a second audit into Hyatt's state income tax liability for that year. App.7. It concluded that Hyatt owed an additional $6 million in taxes and interest for 1992, along with further penalties. Id.

Hyatt challenged the tax audits by filing protests with FTB. Id. Those protests initiated an administrative review process under which both audits were examined again to ensure their accuracy. FTB upheld the audits after administrative review. Id. Hyatt is currently challenging that outcome in an administrative appeal to the California State Board of Equalization.¹ Hyatt has also filed a federal lawsuit against FTB board members and other State officials alleging violations of his constitutional rights. See Hyatt v. Chiang, No. 14-849, 2015 WL 545993, at *6 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 10, 2015) (dismissing suit as barred by Tax Injunction Act), appeal docketed, No. 15-15296 (9th Cir. Feb. 19, 2015).

B. The Nevada Litigation

In January 1998, when the administrative review process was just beginning, Hyatt filed suit against FTB in Nevada state court. He asserted a variety of tort claims based on FTB's alleged conduct during its audits—specifically, negligent misrepresentation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, fraud, invasion of privacy, abuse of process, and breach of a confidential relationship. Hyatt sought compensatory and punitive damages. App.7-8, 11.

FTB moved for summary judgment on the ground that it was entitled to complete immunity from suit in Nevada just as it would be in California. App.10. Under California law, no public entity can be held liable for any injury caused by “instituting any judicial or administrative proceeding or action for or incidental to the assessment or collection of a tax,” or by any “act or omission in the interpretation or application of any law relating to a tax.” Cal. Gov’t Code §860.2. FTB argued that the Full Faith and Credit Clause, along with principles of sovereign immunity and comity, required the Nevada courts to grant FTB that same immunity. Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 491-92.

The trial court denied the motion, and FTB sought review by petitioning the Nevada Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus ordering dismissal of the case. Id. at 492. The Nevada Supreme Court initially granted the petition and ordered judgment for FTB on all of Hyatt's claims. Id. Ten months later, however, it vacated its decision and instead granted the writ in part and denied it in part. It refused to extend complete immunity to FTB based on sovereign immunity, the Full Faith and Credit Clause, or comity, and held that "FTB should be granted partial immunity equal to the immunity a Nevada government agency would receive," which meant immunity for negligence-based torts but not for intentional torts. App.10. The Nevada Supreme Court therefore ordered the trial court to dismiss Hyatt's claim for negligent misrepresentation, but allowed his intentional tort claims to proceed.

C. Hyatt I

FTB filed a petition for certiorari, arguing that the Full Faith and Credit Clause required Nevada to apply the California statute granting FTB complete immunity. This Court granted certiorari and affirmed. It explained that the Full Faith and Credit Clause generally does not require one State to apply the law of another. Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 496. Although recognizing that "the power to promulgate and enforce income tax laws is an essential attribute of sovereignty," it held that the Full Faith and Credit Clause did not require Nevada to respect that sovereign interest by giving FTB the complete immunity that it would have under California law. Id. at 498-99.

In reaching that conclusion, the Court acknowledged that “States’ sovereignty interests are not foreign to the full faith and credit command.” Id. at 499. But it observed that it was “not presented here with a case in which a State has exhibited a ‘policy of hostility to the public Acts’ of a sister State.” Id. (quoting Carroll v. Lanza, 349 U.S. 408, 413 (1955)). Noting that the Nevada Supreme Court had merely granted FTB the same immunity that a Nevada agency would enjoy under similar circumstances—thereby placing FTB on an equal footing with Nevada agencies—the Court commented that the Nevada Supreme Court had “sensitively applied principles of comity” by “relying on the contours of Nevada’s own sovereign immunity from suit” to determine what immunity FTB was entitled to claim. Id.

The Court also emphasized that its ruling did not address a broader issue: whether the Constitution incorporates a principle of State sovereign immunity that protects a State from being sued in the courts of another State without its consent. Id. at 497. The Court had previously rejected that principle in Nevada v. Hall, 440 U.S. 410 (1979), holding that the Constitution did not “require[] all of the States to adhere to the sovereign-immunity doctrine as it prevailed when the Constitution was adopted.” Id. at 418. Nineteen States and Puerto Rico filed an amicus brief in Hyatt I that urged the Court to revisit and overrule Hall, explaining that the case “cannot be reconciled with” the leading decisions on State sovereign immunity. Br. of Florida et al. as Amici Curiae 17, Hyatt I, 538 U.S. 488 (No. 02-42), 2002 WL 32134149. But because FTB itself did not press the issue at that time, the Court declined to reach it. Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 497.

D. Trial and Appeal

Following this Court's decision in Hyatt I, the case returned to the Nevada state trial court. The parties then engaged in lengthy discovery and pretrial proceedings. Finally, in 2008—over ten years after Hyatt filed suit—the case proceeded to a jury trial that lasted approximately four months. App.11. The Nevada jury found for Hyatt on all his claims, awarding him just over $1 million on his fraud claim, $52 million for invasion of privacy, $85 million for emotional distress, and $250 million in punitive damages. Id.

Nevada law imposes a statutory cap on tort damages against a Nevada government agency. Nev. Rev. Stat. §41.035(1). For actions accruing before 2007, that cap was set at $50,000—less than one one-thousandth of the compensatory damages awarded against FTB. See 1995 Nev. Stat. 1071, 1073.² The same Nevada law also prohibits punitive damages against Nevada government agencies. Nev. Rev. Stat. §41.035(1). The state trial court, however, declined to apply those limits to FTB. Instead, it added over $2.5 million in costs and $102 million in prejudgment interest to the jury verdict, for a total judgment against FTB of over $490 million. App.11, 72.

² That cap increased to $75,000 for actions accruing between Oct. 1, 2007 and Oct. 1, 2011, and to $100,000 for actions accruing after the latter date. 2007 Nev. Stat. 3015, 3024-25, 3027.

FTB appealed the numerous errors made by the trial court. First, it argued that under the federal discretionary-function immunity rule, 28 U.S.C. §2680(a), which the Nevada Supreme Court had adopted after Hyatt I, it could not be held liable for any claims arising from the inherently discretionary conduct underlying its audit of Hyatt’s taxes—even intentionally tortious or bad-faith conduct. Second, it argued that Hyatt’s intentional tort claims failed as a matter of law. Third, it argued that under principles of full faith and credit, cooperative federalism, sovereign immunity, and comity, the trial court should have treated FTB like a Nevada government entity by capping compensatory damages and precluding punitive damages. Finally, FTB preserved and pressed its argument that Nevada v. Hall was wrongly decided and should be overruled, and that FTB could not be haled into the Nevada courts absent its consent.

Six years after trial—over sixteen years after Hyatt filed suit—the Nevada Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part. App.1-73. The court first held that FTB could not invoke the federal discretionary-function immunity rule to dispose of Hyatt’s claims because, in its view, that rule is categorically inapplicable to “intentional torts and bad-faith misconduct.” App.14. The court acknowledged that Nevada has “adopted ... the federal test for determining whether discretionary-function immunity applies.” App.17. Furthermore, it noted that under this Court’s jurisprudence, “[t]he focus of the inquiry” under the federal test “is not on the agent’s subjective intent in exercising the discretion conferred ... but on the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy analysis.”

App.24 (quoting United States v. Gaubert, 499 U.S. 315, 325 (1991)). And it conceded that “[o]ther courts” have held that “allegations of intentional or bad-faith misconduct are not relevant to determining if” federal discretionary-function immunity applies. App.19 (citing Reynolds v. United States, 549 F.3d 1108, 1112 (7th Cir. 2008), and Franklin Sav. Corp. v. United States, 180 F.3d 1124, 1135, 1141 (10th Cir. 1999)). Nevertheless, relying heavily on a single Second Circuit decision, see App.22-24 (citing Coulthurst v. United States, 214 F.3d 106 (2d Cir. 2000)), the court adopted a categorical rule that “[d]iscretionary-function immunity does not apply to intentional and bad-faith tort claims,” App.72.

The Nevada Supreme Court then turned to the merits of Hyatt’s intentional tort claims. It held that Hyatt’s claims for invasion of privacy, abuse of process, and breach of a confidential relationship failed as a matter of law, App.25-38; however, it affirmed the jury’s verdict finding FTB liable for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress, App.38-41, 46-51. On those counts, the court pointed to evidence that FTB disclosed Hyatt’s address and social security number to third parties when requesting information, revealed to third parties that he was being audited, and took eleven years to resolve his administrative appeals, and that one of the auditors assigned to his case purportedly made an isolated remark regarding Hyatt’s religion and was “intent on imposing an assessment” against Hyatt. App.40. In the court’s view, this was sufficient evidence for the jury to find FTB liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress. App.50. It was also sufficient for the jury to find fraud, the court concluded, because FTB had provided Hyatt a document at the outset of his audit explaining that during the audit process, Hyatt should expect “[c]ourteous treatment by FTB employees,” “[c]onfidential treatment of any personal and financial information,” and “[c]ompletion of the audit within a reasonable amount of time.” App.5, 39. In the court’s view, a reasonable jury could conclude these were “fraudulent representations,” FTB “knew [they] were false,” and FTB “intended for Hyatt to rely on [them].” App.40-41.

Turning to damages, the Nevada Supreme Court refused to apply to FTB the statutory damages cap applicable to a Nevada government entity. It conceded that “[m]ost courts” in other States extend to out-of-state entities the same protections granted to in-state entities. App.44. It nevertheless concluded that Nevada’s “policy interest in providing adequate redress to Nevada citizens is paramount to providing FTB a statutory cap on damages.” App.45. Accordingly, it “reject[ed] FTB’s argument that it should be entitled to Nevada’s statutory cap on damages for government entities.” App.62. It then held that “[b]ecause punitive damages would not be available against a Nevada government entity,” FTB was immune from punitive damages. App.65. The court accordingly upheld the more than $1 million in damages against FTB for fraud (before prejudgment interest), and remanded for retrial on emotional distress damages due to evidentiary and jury-instruction errors. App.72.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The decision below warrants this Court's review on three vitally important issues of sovereign immunity. First, certiorari is necessary to resolve the acknowledged split over the scope of the federal test for discretionary-function immunity under 28 U.S.C. §2680(a). As the Nevada Supreme Court conceded, numerous federal courts of appeals have held that subjective intent is irrelevant to determining whether §2680(a) applies. Siding with the minority view, however, the Nevada Supreme Court created a categorical exception to discretionary-function immunity that turns entirely on subjective intent, concluding that §2680(a) simply does not apply to intentional torts or bad-faith conduct. That holding deepens a conflict in the lower courts, cannot be reconciled with this Court's precedents, and eviscerates discretionary-function immunity in practice by allowing plaintiffs to challenge any government policy decision simply by alleging an intentional tort or bad faith.

Second, by refusing to extend to an out-of-state agency the same immunities that a Nevada state agency would receive, the Nevada Supreme Court violated this Court's command in Hyatt I. That decision explained that a State is not required to provide greater protection to an out-of-state agency than its own law provides to an in-state agency. But it cautioned that the Full Faith and Credit Clause and principles of sovereign immunity and cooperative federalism prohibit a State from exhibiting a "policy of hostility" for another State's sovereign status by departing from the "contours of [its] own sovereign immunity from suit.” 538 U.S. at 499. The Nevada Supreme Court blatantly transgressed these principles when it refused to extend to FTB, an out-of-state agency, the same sovereign immunity Nevada provides to in-state agencies. If this Court is going to retain the rule of Nevada v. Hall, it is imperative that it reaffirm the principle that a sister sovereign is entitled to the same immunities as the domestic sovereign.

Third, this case amply demonstrates that the better course would be to recognize that Nevada v. Hall is incompatible with both bedrock principles of sovereign immunity and later, better reasoned decisions of this Court and should be overruled. That decision departed from fundamental principles of sovereign immunity as understood at the Framing and as embodied in the structure of the Constitution. Subsequent decisions of this Court have developed those constitutional principles and recognized that the Eleventh Amendment is not a narrow principle applicable only in federal court, but a reflection of more fundamental constitutional principles equally applicable in state court. Those later decisions are better reasoned and incompatible with Hall. What is more, this case amply demonstrates the practical danger of allowing one State to be haled into the courts of a sister sovereign against its will. A Nevada jury needs little incentive to side with a Nevada citizen against another State’s government, especially when the latter is involved in an inherently sovereign and inherently unpopular function like tax collection. And Nevada courts do not feel compelled to respect either the sister State’s or Nevada’s limitations on the waiver of sovereign immunity. In short, Hall has proven both doctrinally and practically unworkable. This Court should take this opportunity to restore the dignity and residual sovereignty of the States. That sovereignty survived the formation of the national government and generally does not yield even in federal court. It should not yield to a mistaken decision that has proven unworkable in this very case.

I. This Court Should Grant Review To Determine Whether The Federal Discretionary-Function Immunity Rule Is Categorically Inapplicable To Intentional Torts And Bad-Faith Conduct.

In holding that the federal discretionary-function immunity rule categorically “does not apply to intentional and bad-faith tort claims,” the Nevada Supreme Court concededly broke from the holdings of “[o]ther courts” that have held precisely the opposite. App.19, 72. Certiorari is necessary to resolve the acknowledged split on this important question.

The federal discretionary-function immunity rule provides that the waiver of sovereign immunity in the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) does not apply to any claim “based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty ... whether or not the discretion involved be abused.” 28 U.S.C. §2680(a). The rule “prevent[s] judicial ‘second-guessing’ of legislative and administrative decisions grounded in social, economic, and political policy through the medium of an action in tort.” Berkovitz v. United States, 486 U.S. 531, 536-37 (1988).

This Court has articulated a two-part test for determining whether a government defendant is entitled to discretionary-function immunity. First, the conduct at issue must “involve[] an element of judgment or choice”; and second, the judgment must be “of the kind that the discretionary function exception was designed to shield,” that is, “governmental actions and decisions based on considerations of public policy.” Berkovitz, 486 U.S. at 536-37; see Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 322-23. The Nevada Supreme Court has expressly adopted the two-part federal test for discretionary-function immunity as its own, because the relevant state statute “mirrors the Federal Tort Claims Act.” Martinez v. Maruszczak, 168 P.3d 720, 722 (Nev. 2007).³

In applying that test, “[t]he focus of the inquiry is not on the [defendant’s] subjective intent ... but on the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy analysis.” Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 325. Based on that reasoning, at least four federal courts of appeals have explicitly held that, in determining whether discretionary-function immunity applies, the defendant’s subjective intent is irrelevant. See, e.g., Irving v. United States, 162 F.3d 154, 167 (1st Cir. 1998) (“We know from Gaubert that the subjective intent of an agency actor is irrelevant to conducting a discretionary function analysis.”); Fisher

Bros. Sales v. United States, 46 F.3d 279, 286 (3d Cir. 1995) (Gaubert “ruled out any inquiry into an official’s ‘subjective intent’”); Reynolds v. United States, 549 F.3d 1108, 1112 (7th Cir. 2008) (“[S]ubjective intent is irrelevant to our analysis.”); Franklin Sav. Corp., 180 F.3d at 1137 (Gaubert establishes “an affirmative bar to inquiry into officials’ subjective intent”). Under the reasoning of these courts, performing a discretionary function in bad faith does not take that conduct outside the purview of the discretionary-function immunity rule.⁴

Along the same lines, at least three federal courts of appeals have expressly rejected the proposition that intentional torts fall outside the scope of the discretionary-function immunity rule. See Medina v. United States, 259 F.3d 220, 226 (4th Cir. 2001) (“[C]laims of intentional torts ... must clear the §2680(a) discretionary function hurdle[.]”); Gasho v. United States, 39 F.3d 1420, 1435 (9th Cir. 1994) (where “the tortious conduct involves a ‘discretionary function,’ a plaintiff cannot maintain an FTCA claim, even if the discretionary act constitutes an intentional tort”); Gray v. Bell, 712 F.2d 490, 507 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Two others have implicitly rejected that proposition by dismissing intentional infliction of emotional distress claims on discretionary-function grounds. See Pierce v. United States, 804 F.2d 101, 102 (8th Cir. 1986); Hart v. United States, 894 F.2d 1539, 1543-46 (11th Cir. 1990).

The Nevada Supreme Court, however, declined to follow these decisions, and relied instead on the Second Circuit's position in Coulthurst v. United States, 214 F.3d 106 (2d Cir. 2000). App.22-24. In Coulthurst, the Second Circuit held that discretionary-function immunity did not apply where a prisoner alleged that a prison guard had failed to adequately inspect and maintain exercise equipment. The court concluded that if a decision not to inspect was "unrelated to any plausible policy objectives," then immunity would not be available. Id. at 111; see also Triestman v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 470 F.3d 471, 475-76 (2d Cir. 2006) (following Coulthurst). Under this approach, discretionary-function immunity depends on why the government official made the decision at issue; that is, it requires an inquiry into subjective intent that the other circuits have rejected. The Nevada Supreme Court then relied on that principle to hold that 28 U.S.C. §2680(a) contains a categorical "exception ... for intentional torts and bad-faith conduct," on the theory that such actions are by definition "unrelated to any plausible policy objective." App.24; see App.72 ("Discretionary-function immunity does not apply to intentional and bad-faith tort claims.").

The Nevada Supreme Court's holding is plainly irreconcilable with the majority view. Instead of holding that subjective intent is irrelevant and intentional torts do not fall outside the discretionary-function immunity rule, the Nevada Supreme Court's rule is that once a plaintiff alleges intentionally tortious or bad-faith conduct, the claim is automatically exempt from the discretionary-function immunity rule. The court adopted this rule despite acknowledging that many "[o]ther courts" have "reached differing results." App.19. This conceded split in the lower courts over this Court's precedent clearly warrants certiorari.

As reflected by the substantial wall of precedent from which it diverged, the Nevada Supreme Court's decision is plainly wrong. To begin with, it is foreclosed by this Court's decisions, which make clear that discretionary-function immunity attaches so long as the challenged conduct involves "an element of judgment or choice" and is "based on considerations of public policy." Berkovitz, 486 U.S. at 536-37. That test focuses on "the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy analysis," and "not on the [defendant's] subjective intent" in carrying out the actions. Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 325. The Nevada Supreme Court's rule takes exactly the opposite approach: it focuses not on the actions taken but on the defendant's subjective intent in undertaking them. Its rule is also incompatible with the text and purpose of 28 U.S.C. §2680(a). "[T]he plain language" of that provision "states that the FTCA's general waiver of sovereign immunity is inapplicable to 'any claim' based on a discretionary function." Gray, 712 F.2d at 507. The text admits no exceptions, much less the categorical exception created by the Nevada Supreme Court. Moreover, discretionary-function immunity exists to "prevent judicial 'second-guessing'" of policy decisions entrusted to the other branches of government. Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 323. That is why it protects all discretionary decisions, “whether or not the discretion involved be abused.” 28 U.S.C. §2680(a). It cannot serve that purpose if courts must second-guess the subjective intent behind those discretionary decisions in order to decide whether immunity is warranted.

Finally, the importance of this question confirms the need for certiorari. To begin with, proper construction of 28 U.S.C. §2680(a) would bring this misbegotten litigation—now in its seventeenth year—to a much-deserved end. Investigations conducted by governmental entities, like tax audits, are clearly discretionary functions under the Gaubert test. See, e.g., Sloan v. U.S. Dep’t of Hous. & Urban Dev., 236 F.3d 756, 762 (D.C. Cir. 2001); Johnson v. United States, 680 F. Supp. 508, 514 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); Foster v. Washoe Cnty., 964 P.2d 788, 792 (Nev. 1998). Therefore, absent the Nevada Supreme Court’s misguided exception for intentionally tortious or bad-faith conduct, Hyatt’s claims—all arising out of FTB’s audit—cannot survive. More broadly, government agencies must know the metes and bounds of the federal discretionary-function rule. The wrong interpretation could—as here—drag a government through years of unwarranted litigation, imposing extraordinary institutional costs ultimately footed by taxpayers.

II. This Court Should Grant Review To Determine Whether A State May Refuse To Extend To Sister States Haled Into Its Courts The Same Immunities It Enjoys In Those Courts.

Certiorari is also warranted because, in refusing to treat a California agency as it would a Nevada agency, the Nevada Supreme Court flagrantly violated the principles of full faith and credit and cooperative federalism that this Court clearly set forth in Hyatt I. If this Court is to retain the rule of Nevada v. Hall, it is imperative that the Court reaffirm that a State haled into another State's court system against its will at least enjoys the same immunities as the host sovereign.

In Hyatt I, this Court held that the Full Faith and Credit Clause did not require Nevada to apply California law granting FTB full immunity from Hyatt's claims. Instead, Nevada could lawfully choose to provide FTB only the lesser protections of Nevada law. 538 U.S. at 498-99. Thus, the Court held, Nevada was not required to apply out-of-state law that would afford out-of-state agencies greater protections than in-state agencies. In reaching this conclusion, the Court relied on the critical premise—advanced by Hyatt himself—that Nevada sought only to treat an out-of-state agency equal to its own agencies. See, e.g., Br. for Resp. at 8, 10, 38-39, Hyatt I, 538 U.S. 488 (No. 02-42), 2003 WL 181170; Tr. of Oral Argument at 46:19-20, Hyatt I, 538 U.S. 488 (No. 02-42) (“We are treating the other sovereign the way we treat ourselves.”).

The Court took that equality premise seriously. In holding that Nevada was not required to treat an out-of-state agency better than an in-state agency, the Court was careful to note that “States’ sovereignty interests are not foreign to the full faith and credit command.” 538 U.S. at 499. And it signaled a different result should a State “exhibit[] a ‘policy of hostility to the public Acts’ of a sister State.” Id. (quoting Carroll, 349 U.S. at 413). But by affording equal treatment to in-state and out-of-state government agencies, this Court concluded that the Nevada Supreme Court had “sensitively applied principles of comity with a healthy regard for California’s sovereign status, relying on the contours of Nevada’s own sovereign immunity from suit as a benchmark for its analysis.” Id.

The decision below eviscerates that premise and transgresses Hyatt I’s stated limitations. Instead of treating FTB equal to a Nevada agency, this time the Nevada Supreme Court treated FTB distinctly worse than a Nevada agency, denying FTB the compensatory damages cap that Nevada law provides for Nevada agencies. And it did so based on reasoning that only a host sovereign could embrace—namely, that there was no reason to subordinate Nevada’s policy favoring full compensation for injured Nevadans to the interests of an out-of-state government. In every relevant respect, that determination squarely infringes on the “sovereignty interests” of California that Hyatt I preserved. Id.

First, the decision plainly demonstrates a “policy of hostility to the public Acts” of California. California law provides FTB absolute immunity, while Nevada law provides its entities only a damages cap. Nev. Rev. Stat. §41.035(1). As Hyatt I establishes, it is one thing for Nevada to refuse FTB the absolute immunity it would enjoy under California law, but it is altogether different and impermissibly hostile for Nevada to refuse to apply the immunity granted by California even to the extent consistent with Nevada law—that is, to refuse FTB the same protection against unlimited damages that a Nevada entity would enjoy. If Nevada provides only a limited waiver of its own sovereign immunity, it cannot allow its citizens to hale sister sovereigns into court without providing those sovereigns at least as much protection as Nevada affords itself. If denying that equal treatment does not constitute “hostility,” it is hard to imagine what does.

Second, the decision below fails to “sensitively appl[y] principles of comity.” As the Nevada Supreme Court itself recognized, “[m]ost courts” hold that under comity, “a state should recognize another state’s laws to the extent that they do not conflict with its own”—meaning that a State will not treat a sister State worse than itself. App.44 (citing Solomon v. Supreme Court of Fla., 816 A.2d 788 (D.C. 2002); Schoeberlein v. Purdue Univ., 544 N.E.2d 283 (Ill. 1989); McDonnell v. Illinois, 748 A.2d 1105 (N.J. 2000); Sam v. Estate of Sam, 134 P.3d 761 (N.M. 2006); Hansen v. Scott, 687 N.W.2d 247 (N.D. 2004)). Yet the Nevada Supreme Court disregarded these cases and declined to apply comity on the basis of a single decision, Faulkner v. Univ. of Tenn., 627 So. 2d 362 (Ala. 1992)). App.44-45. But that reasoning is doubly flawed. First, Faulkner predates Hyatt I and its equality premise; more important, Faulkner addressed a materially different claim. There, the out-of-state agency argued that it should receive the immunity its home state afforded, which is precisely the argument Hyatt I rejected. See 627 So. 2d at 366. Here, however, the out-of-state agency argues that it is entitled to the protections that Nevada provides to its own agencies, which is what Hyatt I and broader principles of sovereign immunity and cooperative federalism require.

Third, the decision below clearly failed to display a “healthy regard for California’s sovereign status.” Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 499. To the contrary, in refusing to apply to California agencies the same damages cap it applies to Nevada agencies, the Nevada Supreme Court manifested a palpable disregard for California’s sovereign status. Nevada’s damages cap recognizes the intrusion upon State sovereignty and proper government administration occasioned by excessive damages awards. See, e.g., Cnty. of Clark ex rel. Univ. Med. Ctr. v. Upchurch, 961 P.2d 754, 759 (Nev. 1998) (acknowledging that caps “protect taxpayers and public funds from potentially devastating judgments”). That intrusion is unquestionably present here; the decision below upheld compensatory damages against FTB of at least $1 million (pre-interest), with potentially millions more to come. The only difference is whether California or Nevada taxpayers will foot the bill. The Nevada Supreme Court’s unwillingness to see the former as a comparably serious problem demonstrates at least a failure to fully respect a sister sovereign, and at most that the regime envisioned by Hall is simply unworkable.

Fourth, and most obviously, the Nevada Supreme Court failed to “rely[] on the contours of Nevada’s own sovereign immunity from suit as a benchmark for its analysis.” Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 499. Quite the contrary, for if the court had relied on the contours of “Nevada’s own sovereign immunity”—which limits the amounts recoverable from the State—it would have applied those principles to FTB. Instead, the Nevada Supreme Court created an exception to its own law, holding that whatever caps may apply to Nevada state agencies do not apply to California agencies. While Nevada may have a “policy interest in providing adequate redress to Nevada citizens,” App.45, Nevada has already decided how to balance that interest against its competing interest in protecting government officials and the public fisc, and that balance is reflected in the contours of the damages caps that it provides its own agencies. Having set that balance one way for itself, it cannot reset that balance differently for sister States.

At bottom, if this Court is to retain the rule of Hall, then the equal-treatment principle embraced in Hyatt I must be strictly enforced. If States really can be haled into the courts of their sister States without consent, then the Full Faith and Credit Clause and basic principles of sovereign immunity and cooperative federalism demand that the involuntarily coerced State receive at least the same protections as the host State. Any other rule allows one State to compensate its citizens at the expense of another sovereign’s treasury on terms that the first State is unwilling to live with itself. Such a regime, embodied by the decision below, demeans sovereign immunity and poses a “substantial threat to our constitutional system of cooperative federalism.” Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 497. The better course may well be to recognize that Hall was a wrong turn—but if not, it is imperative for this Court to make clear that a State must respect other States’ sovereign immunity to the same extent as its own.

III. This Court Should Grant Review To Overrule Nevada v. Hall.

In Nevada v. Hall, this Court held that a State can be sued without its consent in the courts of another State. That holding violates the core principle of sovereign immunity: that “the sovereign cannot be sued in its own courts, or in any other, without its consent and permission.” Beers v. Arkansas, 61 U.S. (20 How.) 527, 529 (1858) (emphasis added). It runs contrary to the intent of the Framers, the structure of the Constitution, and the prior and subsequent, better reasoned sovereign immunity jurisprudence of this Court. And as the facts of this case demonstrate, it demeans the dignity of the States and seriously threatens interstate relations. This case perfectly demonstrates why Hall was wrongly decided, and why the Court should grant certiorari to reconsider and overrule that decision.⁵

⁵ FTB challenged the validity of Hall before the Nevada Supreme Court. Appellant’s Opening Br. at 101 n.80, Franchise Tax Bd. v. Hyatt, 335 P.3d 125 (Nev. 2014) (No. 53264). Given that the Nevada Supreme Court was not free to overrule Hall, that was more than sufficient to preserve this issue for this Court’s review. See United States v. Williams, 504 U.S. 36, 41 (1992) (noting that issue is adequately preserved when “pressed or passed upon below”); cf. Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v.

In Hall, California residents injured in an automobile collision with a University of Nevada employee filed suit in California against the State of Nevada. 440 U.S. at 411-12. A California jury found negligence and awarded over a million dollars in damages. Id. at 413. This Court granted certiorari and held that principles of sovereign immunity do not preclude one State from being haled into the courts of another State. See id. at 426-27.

In so holding, the Court recognized that, at the Framing, common practice would have made sovereign immunity available to one State in the courts of another. Id. at 417. It likewise acknowledged that the debates over ratification of the Constitution, and later Supreme Court decisions, reflected “widespread acceptance of the view that a sovereign state is never amenable to suit without its consent.” Id. at 415-20 (emphasis added). Nevertheless, the Court held that this “widespread” view was only relevant in the context of federal-court (not state-court) jurisdiction, and it refused to “infer[] from the structure of our Constitution” any protection for sovereign immunity beyond the limits on federal-court jurisdiction of Article III and the Eleventh Amendment. Id. at 421, 426. The Court therefore held that no “federal rule of law implicit in the Constitution ... requires all of the States to adhere to the sovereign-immunity doctrine as it prevailed when the Constitution was adopted.” Id. at 418. Instead, a State must simply hope that, as “a matter of comity” and “wise policy,” a sister State will not subject it to suit. Id. at 425-26.

Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 99 n.8 (1984) (sovereign immunity “may be raised at any point”).

Justice Blackmun dissented, joined by Chief Justice Burger and Justice Rehnquist. Unlike the majority, those Justices would have held that the Constitution implicitly embodied a “doctrine of interstate sovereign immunity” as an “essential component of federalism.” Id. at 430 (Blackmun, J., dissenting). Justice Rehnquist also separately dissented, joined by Chief Justice Burger; he explained that the Court’s decision “work[ed] a fundamental readjustment of interstate relationships which is impossible to reconcile ... with express holdings of this Court and the logic of the constitutional plan itself.” Id. at 432-33 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

Hall was mistaken when decided, and subsequent developments have undermined its doctrinal underpinnings. In particular, a whole line of this Court’s subsequent precedents have rejected the Hall majority’s conception of the Eleventh Amendment as concerned only about federal court jurisdiction, and have instead explained that the Eleventh Amendment reflected the Framers’ original understanding in ways that have implications for proceedings in state courts, see Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 712 (1999), and even federal administrative agencies, Fed. Mar. Comm’n v. S.C. State Ports Auth. (FMC), 535 U.S. 743, 747 (2002). In short, subsequent developments have vindicated the views of the Hall dissenters in ways that make Hall’s reconsideration long overdue.

To begin with, the rule of Hall cannot be reconciled with any fair reading of history. As the Hall majority conceded, the Framers would clearly have acknowledged the sovereign immunity of one State in the courts of another. See 440 U.S. at 417, 420. Indeed, a prominent Pennsylvania case from 1781 determined that an individual could not use the state courts of Pennsylvania to attach property belonging to Virginia. Nathan v. Virginia, 1 U.S. (1 Dall.) 77 (Pa. Ct. C.P. 1781); see Hall, 440 U.S. at 435 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). While the ratification debates focused (naturally enough) on sovereign immunity in the new federal courts, the language they used leaves no doubt that the same immunity was recognized in state courts. See, e.g., The Federalist No. 81, at 487 (Alexander Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961) (“It is inherent in the nature of sovereignty not to be amenable to the suit of an individual without its consent.” (emphasis altered)); see also Ann Woolhandler, Interstate Sovereign Immunity, 2006 Sup. Ct. Rev. 249, 252-63. The “only reason” why interstate sovereign immunity was not specifically discussed during the ratification debates “is that it was too obvious to deserve mention.” Hall, 440 U.S. at 431 (Blackmun, J., dissenting).

The Eleventh Amendment confirms the Framers’ understanding. In Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 419 (1793), this Court held that a private citizen of one State could sue another State in federal court. The Eleventh Amendment was adopted as an immediate and outraged response, to restore to the States their “immunity from private suits.” Alden, 527 U.S. at 724. While the Amendment does not explicitly address interstate sovereign immunity, it clearly shows that such immunity was assumed: “If the Framers were indeed concerned lest the States be haled before the federal courts—as the courts of a ‘higher sovereign’—how much more must they have reprehended the notion of a State’s being haled before the courts of a sister State.” Hall, 440 U.S. at 431 (Blackmun, J., dissenting) (citation omitted). After all, the federal courts were intended to be a neutral forum for interstate disputes. A State would surely rather be tried in that neutral federal forum than before a partisan jury and judge in another State’s courts. By removing the option of suit in federal forum while leaving the worse option of suit in another State’s courts, Hall “makes nonsense of the effort embodied in the Eleventh Amendment to preserve the doctrine of sovereign immunity.” Id. at 441 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

Hall likewise conflicts with this Court’s precedents from both before and after the decision. Before Hall, this Court repeatedly indicated that State sovereign immunity extended to “any court in this country.” Cunningham v. Macon & Brunswick R.R., 109 U.S. 446, 451 (1883); Beers, 61 U.S. (20 How.) at 529; see also In re New York, 256 U.S. 490, 497 (1921) (noting the “fundamental rule of jurisprudence” that “a state may not be sued without its consent”).⁶ And since Hall, this Court has rejected almost every premise that underlies that decision. Hall refused to recognize sovereign immunity as a basic assumption of the Constitution, 440 U.S. at 426; subsequent decisions, by contrast, have repeatedly treated sovereign immunity as a “fundamental postulate[] implicit in the constitutional design,” Alden, 527 U.S. at 729, and a “presupposition of our constitutional structure,” Blatchford v. Native Vill. of Noatak, 501 U.S. 775, 779 (1991); see also, e.g., Va. Office for Protection & Advocacy v. Stewart, 131 S. Ct. 1632, 1637-38 (2011); FMC, 535 U.S. at 751-53; Seminole Tribe of Fla. v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 54 (1996). Hall effectively limited sovereign immunity to the words of Article III and the Eleventh Amendment, 440 U.S. at 421, 424-27; subsequent cases, by contrast, have recognized that the Constitution implicitly protects principles of sovereign immunity that go beyond its literal text. See, e.g., FMC, 535 U.S. at 753; Alden, 527 U.S. at 728-29; Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 779. Hall casually departed from the Framing-era view of sovereign immunity; subsequent cases have consistently relied on the Framing-era view, and have interpreted sovereign immunity to prohibit “any proceedings against the States that were ‘anomalous and unheard of when the Constitution was adopted.’” FMC, 535 U.S. at 756 (quoting Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 18 (1890)). In short, while Hall was wrong the day it was decided, a host of subsequent, better reasoned decisions have fatally undermined its doctrinal underpinnings.

To be sure, as this Court has refined its sovereign immunity jurisprudence, it has occasionally had the felt need to distinguish Hall. For example, in recognizing a State’s immunity from suit in its own courts even for a federal cause of action, Alden rejected the federal government’s extensive reliance on Hall and found Hall distinguishable. But nothing in Alden suggests that Hall was correct. To the contrary, Alden's understanding of the constitutional underpinnings of sovereign immunity is irreconcilable with the Hall majority's view of the Eleventh Amendment as divorced from broader sovereign immunity principles. Indeed, based on Alden's understanding of sovereign immunity, not even the Hall majority could credibly argue that it is permissible for a State to be haled into the courts of another State absent consent.

Not only does Hall rest on flawed doctrinal premises that have been eliminated by subsequent precedent; it has proven practically unworkable as well. Indeed, this Court need look no further than the facts of this case to understand why Hall must go. From its filing to the first day of trial, Hyatt's suit dragged California through ten years of litigation—including a previous trip to this Court—and untold financial and administrative burdens. Once the case finally reached trial, the Nevada jury below was happy to find for a fellow Nevadan on his questionable tort claims against the California tax authorities. They were even happier to award their fellow Nevadan some $388 million in damages, which the Nevada trial court calmly raised to over $490 million after costs and interest. Since trial, California has spent another seven years fighting that verdict, and it faces the prospect of yet another trial on remand if this Court denies review.

Perhaps worst of all, this suit has encouraged other Nevada residents to file similar complaints, raising the prospect of similar litigation in endless repetition. See, e.g., Complaint, Schroeder v. California, No. 14-2613 (Dist. Ct. Nev. filed Dec. 18, 2014) (alleging “extreme and outrageously tortious conduct” by FTB). These suits are highly regrettable yet, given Hall, entirely unsurprising. Sovereign governments undertake a number of sovereign responsibilities that have been unpopular as long as there have been governments. Taxation is near the top of that list. Sovereign immunity allows the sovereign to undertake such activities without the constant threat of litigation. And while sovereigns are a tempting target for litigation in any circumstance, a jury might at least have some sense that a large verdict against the sovereign will ultimately be footed by taxpayers. Thus, a foreign sovereign stripped of sovereign immunity and haled into courts by citizens of a foreign State is a uniquely vulnerable target. What is more, an increasingly mobile citizenry creates ample opportunities for suits like this one. Indeed, this case has already been used to encourage California residents to move to Nevada for tax-avoidance purposes, since it “should temper the FTB’s aggressiveness in pursuing cases against those disclaiming California residency.” David M. Grant, Moving From Gold to Silver: Becoming a Nevada Resident, Nev. Law., Jan. 2015, at 22, 25 n.9.

And make no mistake, the threat here extends beyond the State’s fiscal and dignity interests. If FTB can be found liable for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of its “power to ... enforce income tax laws,” Hyatt I, 538 U.S. at 498, it will undoubtedly be forced to alter how it conducts this “essential attribute of sovereignty.” Id. But that is precisely why sovereign immunity has been extended to States sued in their own courts and the federal courts. See Alden, 527 U.S. at 750-51 (observing that “[p]rivate suits against nonconsenting States” may “threaten the financial integrity of the States” and impose “substantial costs [upon] the autonomy, the decisionmaking ability, and the sovereign capacity of the States”). There is no principled reason why a State must endure these same burdens because it has been sued in another State’s courts as opposed to its own courts or the federal courts.

In short, this case emphatically illustrates the “severe strains on our system of cooperative federalism” against which the Hall dissenters warned. Hall, 440 U.S. 429-30 (Blackmun, J., dissenting). If the Framers would have “reprehended the notion of a State’s being haled before the courts of a sister State,” id. at 431, a suit like this one would have left them aghast. This case firmly demonstrates the obvious flaws of Hall and the virtues of applying the sovereign immunity principles this Court has repeatedly recognized both before and after Hall.

But the Court need not take FTB’s word for it: Nevada itself recently asked this Court to overrule Hall after being haled into the California courts against its will. See Petition for Writ of Certiorari 12 n.3, 17 n.8, 19, Nevada v. City & Cnty. of S.F., 2015 WL 981686 (U.S. Mar. 4, 2015) (No. 14-1073). The spectacle of two States being sued in each other’s courts—each unsuccessfully invoking sovereign immunity—confirms the Hall dissenters’ prediction that discarding interstate sovereign immunity would substitute a race-to-the-bottom for cooperative federalism. See 440 U.S. at 429-30 (Blackmun, J.).

And it underscores the absurdity and perniciousness of Hall in practice.

Needless to say, this Court does not reconsider its precedents lightly. But virtually every stare decisis consideration militates against retaining Hall. Hall set no substantive rules that “serve as a guide to lawful behavior,” United States v. Gaudin, 515 U.S. 506, 521 (1995), and Hall engenders no meaningful reliance interests. Most important, stare decisis cannot save a decision that is both practically unworkable and “has been proved manifestly erroneous, and its underpinnings eroded, by subsequent decisions of this Court.” Id. At a bare minimum, the continuing validity of Hall is a question that merits this Court’s plenary consideration.

* * *

Each of the questions presented in this petition independently warrants certiorari. But it bears emphasizing that they are interrelated as well: each concerns the extent to which one State is at the mercy of another State’s courts. Under fundamental principles of sovereign immunity and cooperative federalism, FTB should have never been subjected to suit in the Nevada courts in the first place. To the extent Hall holds otherwise, it should be overruled. But if the Court will not revisit Hall, then it becomes that much more important to reaffirm that the discretionary-function standard is more than a pleading obstacle, and that States may not afford foreign sovereigns less immunity than they grant themselves.

CONCLUSION

The Court should grant the petition for certiorari.

OPINION

By the Court, HARDESTY, J.:

In 1998, inventor Gilbert P. Hyatt sued the Franchise Tax Board of the State of California (FTB) seeking damages for intentional torts and bad-faith conduct committed by FTB auditors during tax audits of Hyatt's 1991 and 1992 state tax returns. After years of litigation, a jury awarded Hyatt $139 million in damages on his tort claims and $250 million in punitive damages. In this appeal, we must determine, among other issues, whether we should revisit our exception to government immunity for intentional torts and bad-faith conduct as a result of this court's adoption of the federal test for discretionary-function immunity, which shields a government entity or its employees from suit for discretionary acts that involve an element of individual judgment or choice and that are grounded in public policy considerations. We hold that our exception to immunity for intentional torts and bad-faith conduct survives our adoption of the federal discretionary-function immunity test because intentional torts and bad-faith conduct are not based on public policy.

Because FTB cannot invoke discretionary-function immunity to protect itself from Hyatt's intentional tort and bad-faith causes of action, we must determine whether Hyatt's claims for invasion of privacy, breach of confidential relationship, abuse of process, fraud, and intentional infliction of emotional distress survive as a matter of law, and if so, whether they are supported by substantial evidence. All of Hyatt's causes of action, except for his fraud and intentional infliction of emotion distress claims, fail as a matter of law, and thus, the judgment in his favor on these claims is reversed.

As to the fraud cause of action, sufficient evidence exists to support the jury's findings that FTB made false representations to Hyatt regarding the audits' processes and that Hyatt relied on those representations to his detriment and damages resulted. In regard to Hyatt's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, we conclude that medical records are not mandatory in order to establish a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress if the acts of the defendant are sufficiently severe. As a result, substantial evidence supports the jury's findings as to liability, but evidentiary and jury instruction errors committed by the district court require reversal of the damages awarded for emotional distress and a remand for a new trial as to the amount of damages on this claim only.

In connection with these causes of action, we must address whether FTB is entitled to a statutory cap on the amount of damages that Hyatt may recover from FTB on the fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress claims under comity. We conclude that Nevada's policy interest in providing adequate redress to its citizens outweighs providing FTB a statutory cap on damages under comity, and therefore, we affirm the $1,085,281.56 of special damages awarded to Hyatt on his fraud cause of action and conclude that there is no statutory cap on the amount of damages that may be awarded on remand on the intentional infliction of emotional distress claim.

We also take this opportunity to address as a matter of first impression whether, based on comity, it is reasonable to provide FTB with the same protection of California law, to the extent that it does not conflict with Nevada law, to grant FTB immunity from punitive damages. Because punitive damages would not be available against a Nevada government entity, we hold, under comity principles, that FTB is immune from punitive damages. Thus, we reverse that portion of the district court's judgment awarding Hyatt punitive damages.

For the reasons discussed below, we affirm in part, reverse in part, and remand this case to the district court for further proceedings.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

California proceedings

In 1993, after reading a newspaper article regarding respondent/cross-appellant Hyatt's lucrative computer-chip patent and the large sums of money that Hyatt was making from the patent, a tax auditor for appellant/cross-respondent FTB decided to review Hyatt's 1991 state income tax return. The return revealed that Hyatt did not report, as taxable income, the money that he had earned from the patent's licensing payments and that he had only reported 3.5 percent of his total taxable income for 1991. Hyatt's tax return showed that he had lived in California for nine months in 1991 before relocating to Las Vegas, Nevada, but Hyatt claimed no moving expenses on his 1991 tax return. Based on these discrepancies, FTB opened an audit on Hyatt's 1991 state income tax return.

The 1991 audit began when Hyatt was sent notice that he was being audited. This notification included an information request form that required Hyatt to provide certain information concerning his connections to California and Nevada and the facts surrounding his move to Nevada. A portion of the information request form contained a privacy notice, which stated in relevant part that “The Information Practices Act of 1977 and the federal Privacy Act require the Franchise Tax Board to tell you why we ask you for information. The Operations and Compliance Divisions ask for tax return information to carry out the Personal Income Tax Law of the State of California.” Also included with the notification was a document containing a list of what the taxpayer could expect from FTB: “Courteous treatment by FTB employees[,] Clear and concise requests for information from the auditor assigned to your case[,] Confidential treatment of any personal and financial information that you provide to us[,] Completion of the audit within a reasonable amount of time[.]”

The audit involved written communications and interviews. FTB sent over 100 letters and demands for information to third parties including banks, utility companies, newspapers (to learn if Hyatt had subscriptions), medical providers, Hyatt’s attorneys, two Japanese companies that held licenses to Hyatt’s patent (inquiring about payments to Hyatt), and other individuals and entities that Hyatt had identified as contacts. Many, but not all, of the letters and demands for information contained Hyatt’s social security number or home address or both. FTB also requested information and documents directly from Hyatt. Interviews were conducted and signed statements were obtained from three of Hyatt’s relatives—his ex-wife, his brother, and his daughter—all of whom were estranged from Hyatt during the relevant period in question, except for a short time when Hyatt and his daughter attempted to reconcile their relationship. No relatives with whom Hyatt had good relations, including his son, were ever interviewed even though Hyatt had identified them as contacts. FTB sent auditors to Hyatt's neighborhood in California and to various locations in Las Vegas in search of information.

Upon completion of the 1991 audit, FTB concluded that Hyatt did not move from California to Las Vegas in September 1991, as he had stated, but rather, that Hyatt had moved in April 1992. FTB further concluded that Hyatt had staged the earlier move to Nevada by renting an apartment, obtaining a driver's license, insurance, bank account, and registering to vote, all in an effort to avoid state income tax liability on his patent licensing. FTB further determined that the sale of Hyatt's California home to his work assistant was a sham. A detailed explanation of what factors FTB considered in reaching its conclusions was provided, which in addition to the above, included comparing contacts between Nevada and California, banking activity in the two states, evidence of Hyatt's location in the two states during the relevant period, and professionals whom he employed in the two states. Based on these findings, FTB determined that Hyatt owed the state of California approximately $1.8 million in additional state income taxes and that penalties against Hyatt in the amount of $1.4 million were warranted. These amounts, coupled with $1.2 million in interest, resulted in a total assessment of $4.5 million.

App-7

The 1991 audit's finding that Hyatt did not move to Las Vegas until April 1992 prompted FTB to commence a second audit of Hyatt's 1992 California state taxes. Because he maintained that he lived in Nevada that tax year, Hyatt did not file a California tax return for 1992, and he opposed the audit. Relying in large part on the 1991 audit's findings and a single request for information sent to Hyatt regarding patent-licensing payments received in 1992, FTB found that Hyatt owed the state of California over $6 million in taxes and interest for 1992. Moreover, penalties similar to those imposed by the 1991 audit were later assessed.

Hyatt formally challenged the audits' conclusions by filing two protests with FTB that were handled concurrently. Under a protest, an audit is reviewed by FTB for accuracy, or the need for any changes, or both. The protests lasted over 11 years and involved 3 different FTB auditors. In the end, FTB upheld the audits, and Hyatt went on to challenge them in the California courts.²

Nevada litigation

During the protests, Hyatt filed the underlying Nevada lawsuit in January 1998. His complaint included a claim for declaratory relief concerning the timing of his move from California to Nevada and a claim for negligence. The complaint also identified seven intentional tort causes of action allegedly committed by FTB during the 1991 and 1992 audits: invasion of privacy—intrusion upon seclusion, ² At the time of this appeal, Hyatt was still challenging the audits' conclusions in California courts.

invasion of privacy—publicity of private facts, invasion of privacy—false light, intentional infliction of emotional distress, fraud, breach of confidential relationship, and abuse of process. Hyatt’s lawsuit was grounded on his allegations that FTB conducted unfair audits that amounted to FTB “seeking to trump up a tax claim against him or attempt[ing] to extort him,” that FTB’s audits were “goal-oriented,” that the audits were conducted to improve FTB’s tax assessment numbers, and that the penalties FTB imposed against Hyatt were intended “to better bargain for and position the case to settle.”

Early in the litigation, FTB filed a motion for partial summary judgment challenging the Nevada district court’s jurisdiction over Hyatt’s declaratory relief cause of action. The district court agreed on the basis that the timing of Hyatt’s move from California to Nevada and whether FTB properly assessed taxes and penalties against Hyatt should be resolved in the ongoing California administrative process. Accordingly, the district court granted FTB partial summary judgment.³ As a result of the district court’s ruling, the parties were required to litigate the action under the restraint that any determinations as to the audits’ accuracy were not part of Hyatt’s tort action and the jury would not make any findings as to when Hyatt moved to Nevada or whether the audits’ conclusions were correct.

FTB also moved the district court for partial summary judgment to preclude Hyatt from seeking recovery for alleged economic damages. As part of its audit investigation, FTB sent letters to two Japanese companies that had licensing agreements with Hyatt requesting payment information between Hyatt and the companies. Included with the letters were copies of the licensing agreements between Hyatt and the Japanese companies. Hyatt asserted that those documents were confidential and that when FTB sent the documents to the companies, the companies were made aware that Hyatt was under investigation. Based on this disclosure, Hyatt theorized that the companies would have then notified the Japanese government, who would in turn notify other Japanese businesses that Hyatt was under investigation. Hyatt claimed that this ultimately ended Hyatt's patent-licensing business in Japan. Hyatt's evidence in support of these allegations included the fact that FTB sent the letters, that the two businesses sent responses, that Hyatt had no patent-licensing income after this occurred, and expert testimony that this chain of events would likely have occurred in the Japanese business culture. FTB argued that Hyatt's evidence was speculative and insufficient to adequately support his claim. Hyatt argued that he had sufficient circumstantial evidence to present the issue to the jury. The district court granted FTB's motion for partial summary judgment, concluding that Hyatt had offered no admissible evidence to support that the theorized chain of events actually occurred and, as a result, his evidence was too speculative to overcome the summary judgment motion.

³ That ruling was not challenged in this court, and consequently, it is not part of this appeal.

App-9

One other relevant proceeding that bears discussion in this appeal concerns two original writ petitions filed by FTB in this court in 2000. In those petitions, FTB sought immunity from the entire underlying Nevada lawsuit, arguing that it was entitled to the complete immunity that it enjoyed under California law based on either sovereign immunity, the Full Faith and Credit Clause, or comity. This court resolved the petitions together in an unpublished order in which we concluded that FTB was not entitled to full immunity under any of these principles. But we did determine that, under comity, FTB should be granted partial immunity equal to the immunity a Nevada government agency would receive. In light of that ruling, this court held that FTB was immune from Hyatt's negligence cause of action, but not from his intentional tort causes of action. The court concluded that while Nevada provided immunity for discretionary decisions made by government agencies, such immunity did not apply to intentional torts or bad-faith conduct because to allow it to do so would "contravene Nevada's policies and interests in this case."

This court's ruling in the writ petitions was appealed to and upheld by the United States Supreme Court. Franchise Tax Bd. of Cal. v. Hyatt, 538 U.S. 488 (2003). In Hyatt, the Supreme Court focused on the issue of whether the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the federal constitution required Nevada to afford FTB the benefit of the full immunity that California provides FTB. Id. at 494. The Court upheld this court's determination that Nevada was not required to give FTB full immunity Id. at 499. The Court further upheld this court's conclusion that FTB was entitled to partial immunity under comity principles, observing that this court "sensitively applied principles of comity with a healthy regard for California's sovereign status, relying on the contours of Nevada's own sovereign immunity from suit as a benchmark for its analysis." Id. The Supreme Court's ruling affirmed this court's limitation of Hyatt's case against FTB to the intentional tort causes of action.

Ultimately, Hyatt's case went to trial before a jury. The trial lasted approximately four months. The jury found in favor of Hyatt on all intentional tort causes of action and returned special verdicts awarding him damages in the amount of $85 million for emotional distress, $52 million for invasion of privacy, $1,085,281.56 as special damages for fraud, and $250 million in punitive damages. Following the trial, Hyatt sought prejudgment interest and moved the district court for costs. The district court assigned the motion to a special master who, after 15 months of discovery and further motion practice, issued a recommendation that Hyatt be awarded approximately $2.5 million in costs. The district court adopted the master's recommendation.

FTB appeals from the district court's final judgment and the post-judgment award of costs. Hyatt cross-appeals, challenging the district court's partial summary judgment ruling that he could not seek, as part of his damages at trial, economic damages for the alleged destruction of his patent-licensing business in Japan.⁴

DISCUSSION

We begin by addressing FTB's appeal, which raises numerous issues that it argues entitle it to either judgment as a matter of law in its favor or remand for a new trial. As a threshold matter, we address discretionary-function immunity and whether Hyatt's causes of action against FTB are barred by this immunity, or whether there is an exception to the immunity for intentional torts and bad-faith conduct. Deciding that FTB is not immune from suit, we then consider FTB's arguments as to each of Hyatt's intentional tort causes of action. We conclude our consideration of FTB's appeal by discussing Nevada's statutory caps on damages and immunity from punitive damages. As for Hyatt's cross-appeal, we close this opinion by considering his challenge to the district court's partial summary judgment in FTB's favor on Hyatt's damages claim for economic loss.

FTB is not immune from suit under comity because discretionary-function immunity in Nevada does not protect Nevada's government or its employees from intentional torts and bad-faith conduct

Like most states, Nevada has waived traditional sovereign immunity from tort liability, with some exceptions. NRS 41.031. The relevant exception at issue in this appeal is discretionary-function immunity, which provides that no action can be brought against the state or its employee "based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of the State ... or of any ... employee ..., whether or not the discretion involved is abused.” NRS 41.032(2). By adopting discretionary-function immunity, our Legislature has placed a limit on its waiver of sovereign immunity. Discretionary-function immunity is grounded in separation of powers concerns and is designed to preclude the judicial branch from “second-guessing,” in a tort action, legislative and executive branch decisions that are based on “social, economic, and political policy.” Martinez v. Maruszczak, 123 Nev. 433, 446, 168 P.3d 720, 729 (2007) (internal quotations omitted); see also Bailey v. United States, 623 F.3d 855, 860 (9th Cir. 2010). FTB initially argues on appeal that immunity protects it from Hyatt’s intentional tort causes of action based on the application of discretionary-function immunity and comity as recognized in Nevada.

Comity is a legal principle whereby a forum state may give effect to the laws and judicial decisions of another state based in part on deference and respect for the other state, but only so long as the other state’s laws are not contrary to the policies of the forum state. Mianecki v. Second Judicial Dist. Court, 99 Nev. 93, 98, 658 P.2d 422, 424-25 (1983); see also Solomon v. Supreme Court of Fla., 816 A.2d 788, 790 (D.C. 2002); Schoeberlein v. Purdue Univ., 544 N.E.2d 283, 285 (Ill. 1989); McDonnell v. Ill., 748 A.2d 1105, 1107 (N.J. 2000); Sam v. Estate of Sam, 134 P.3d 761, 764-66 (N.M. 2006); Hansen v. Scott, 687 N.W.2d 247, 250, 250 (N.D. 2004). The purpose behind comity is to “foster cooperation, promote harmony, and build good will” between states. Hansen, 687 N.W.2d at 250 (internal quotations omitted). But whether to invoke comity is within the forum state's discretion. Mianecki, 99 Nev. at 98, 658 P.2d at 425. Thus, when a lawsuit is filed against another state in Nevada, while Nevada is not required to extend immunity in its courts to the other state, Nevada will consider extending immunity under comity, so long as doing so does not violate Nevada's public policies. Id. at 98, 658 P.2d at 424-25. In California, FTB enjoys full immunity from tort actions arising in the context of an audit. Cal. Gov't Code § 860.2 (West 2012). FTB contends that it should receive the immunity protection provided by California statutes to the extent that such immunity does not violate Nevada's public policies under comity.

Discretionary-function immunity in Nevada

This court's treatment of discretionary-function immunity has changed over time. In the past, we applied different tests to determine whether to grant a government entity or its employee discretionary-function immunity. See, e.g., Arnesano v. State ex rel. Dep't of Transp., 113 Nev. 815, 823-24, 942 P.2d 139, 144-45 (1997) (applying planning-versus-operational test to government action), abrogated by Martinez, 123 Nev. at 443-44, 168 P.3d at 726-27; State v. Silva, 86 Nev. 911, 913-14, 478 P.2d 591, 592-93 (1970) (applying discretionary-versus-ministerial test to government conduct), abrogated by Martinez, 123 Nev. at 443-44, 168 P.3d at 726-27. We also recognized an exception to discretionary-function immunity for intentional torts and bad-faith conduct. Falline v. GNLV Corp., 107 Nev. 1004, 1009 & n.3, 823 P.2d 888, 892 & n.3 (1991) (plurality opinion). More recently, we adopted the federal two-part test for determining the applicability of discretionary-function immunity. Martinez, 123 Nev. at 444-47, 168 P.3d at 727-29 (adopting test named after two United States Supreme Court decisions: Berkovitz v. United States, 486 U.S. 531 (1988), and United States v. Gaubert, 499 U.S. 315 (1991)). Under the Berkovitz-Gaubert two-part test, discretionary-function immunity will apply if the government actions at issue “(1) involve an element of individual judgment or choice and (2) [are] based on considerations of social, economic, or political policy.” Martinez, 123 Nev. at 446-47, 168 P.3d at 729. When this court adopted the federal test in Martinez, we expressly dispensed with the earlier tests used by this court to determine whether to grant a government entity or its employee immunity, id. at 444, 168 P.3d at 727, but we did not address the Falline exception to immunity for intentional torts or bad-faith misconduct.

In the earlier writ petitions filed by FTB in this court, we relied on Falline to determine that FTB was entitled to immunity from Hyatt’s negligence cause of action, but not the remaining intentional-tort-based causes of action. Because the law concerning the application of discretionary-function immunity has changed in Nevada since FTB’s writ petitions were resolved, we revisit the application of discretionary-function immunity to FTB in the present case as it relates to Hyatt’s intentional tort causes of action. Hsu v. Cnty. of Clark, 123 Nev. 625, 632, 173 P.3d 724, 730 (2007) (stating that “the doctrine of the law of the case should not apply where, in the interval between two appeals of a case, there has been a change in the law by ... a judicial ruling entitled to deference” (internal quotations omitted)).

FTB contends that when this court adopted the federal test in Martinez, it impliedly overruled the Falline exception to discretionary-function immunity for intentional torts and bad-faith misconduct. Hyatt maintains that the Martinez case did not alter the exception created in Falline and that discretionary immunity does not apply to bad-faith misconduct because an employee does not have discretion to undertake intentional torts or act in bad faith.

In Falline, 107 Nev. at 1009, 823 P.2d at 891-92, this court ruled that the discretionary-function immunity under NRS 41.032(2) did not apply to bad-faith misconduct. The case involved negligent processing of a workers' compensation claim. Falline injured his back at work and later required surgery. Falline, 107 Nev. at 1006, 823 P.2d at 890. Following the surgery, while rising from a seated position, Falline experienced severe lower-back pain. Id. at 1006-07, 823 P.2d at 890. Falline's doctor concluded that Falline's back pain was related to his work injury. Id. at 1007, 823 P.2d at 890. The self-insured employer, however, refused to provide workers' compensation benefits beyond those awarded for the work injury because it asserted that an intervening injury had occurred. Id. After exhausting his administrative remedies, it was determined that Falline was entitled to workers' compensation benefits for both injuries. Id. He was nevertheless denied benefits. Id. Falline brought suit against the employer for negligence and bad faith in the processing of his workers' compensation claims. Id. at 1006, 823 P.2d at 889-90. The district court dismissed his causes of action, and Falline appealed, arguing that dismissal was improper.

On appeal, after concluding that a self-insured employer should be treated the same as the State Industrial Insurance System, this court concluded that Falline could maintain a lawsuit against the self-insured employer based on negligent handling of his claims. Id. at 1007-09, 823 P.2d at 890-92. In discussing its holding, the court addressed discretionary immunity and explained that “if failure or refusal to timely process or pay claims is attributable to bad faith, immunity does not apply whether an act is discretionary or not.” Id. at 1009, 823 P.2d at 891. The court reasoned that the insurer did not have discretion to act in bad faith, and therefore, discretionary-function immunity did not apply to protect the insurer from suit. Id. at 1009, 823 P.2d at 891-92.

The Falline court expressly addressed NRS 41.032(2)'s language that there is immunity “whether or not the discretion involved is abused.” Falline, 107 Nev. at 1009 n.3, 823 P.2d at 892 n.3. The court determined that bad faith is different from an abuse of discretion, in that an abuse of discretion occurs when a person acts within his or her authority but the action lacks justification, while bad faith “involves an implemented attitude that completely transcends the circumference of authority granted” to the actor. Id. Thus, the Falline court viewed the exception to discretionary immunity broadly.

Following Falline, this court adopted, in Martinez, the federal test for determining whether discretionary-function immunity applies. 123 Nev. at 446, 168 P.3d at 729. Under the two-part federal test, the first step is to determine whether the government conduct involves judgment or choice. Id. at 446-47, 168 P.3d at 729. If a statute, regulation, or policy requires the government employee to follow a specific course of action for which the employee has no option but to comply with the directive, and the employee fails to follow this directive, the discretionary-immunity exception does not apply to the employee's action because the employee is not acting with individual judgment or choice. Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 322. On the other hand, if an employee is free to make discretionary decisions when executing the directives of a statute, regulation, or policy, the test's second step requires the court to examine the nature of the actions taken and whether they are susceptible to policy analysis. Martinez, 123 Nev. at 445-46, 168 P.3d at 729; Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 324. "[E]ven assuming the challenged conduct involves an element of judgment [or choice]," the second step requires the court to determine "whether that judgment [or choice] is of the kind that the discretionary function exception was designed to shield." Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 322-23. If "the challenged actions are not the kind of conduct that can be said to be grounded in the policy of the regulatory regime," discretionary-function immunity will not bar the claim. Id. at 324-25. The second step focuses on whether the conduct undertaken is a policymaking decision regardless of the employee's subjective intent when he or she acted. Martinez, 123 Nev. at 445, 168 P.3d at 728.

FTB argues that the federal test abolished the Falline intentional tort or bad-faith misconduct exception to discretionary-function immunity because the federal test is objective, not subjective. Hyatt asserts that an intentional or bad-faith tort will not meet the two-part discretionary-immunity test because such conduct cannot be discretionary or policy-based.

Other courts addressing similar questions have reached differing results, depending on whether the court views the restriction against considering subjective intent to apply broadly or is limited to determining if the decision is a policymaking decision. Some courts conclude that allegations of intentional or bad-faith misconduct are not relevant to determining if the immunity applies because courts should not consider the employee's subjective intent at all. Reynolds v. United States, 549 F.3d 1108, 1112 (7th Cir. 2008); Franklin Sav. Corp. v. United States, 180 F.3d 1124, 1135 (10th Cir. 1999); see also Sydnese v. United States, 523 F.3d 1179, 1185 (10th Cir. 2008). But other courts focus on whether the employee's conduct can be viewed as a policy-based decision and hold that intentional torts or bad-faith misconduct are not policy-based acts. Triestman v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 470 F.3d 471, 475 (2d Cir. 2006); Palay v. United States, 349 F.3d 418, 431-32 (7th Cir. 2003); Coulthurst v. United States, 214 F.3d 106, 109 (2d Cir. 2000).⁵ These courts bar the application of discretionary-function immunity in intentional tort and bad-faith misconduct cases when the government action involved is “unrelated to any plausible policy objective[].” Coulthurst, 214 F.3d at 111. A closer look at these courts’ decisions is useful for our analysis.

Courts that decline to recognize bad-faith conduct that calls for an inquiry into an employee’s subjective intent

In Franklin Savings Corp. v. United States, 180 F.3d at 1127, 1134-42, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals addressed the specific issue of whether a claim for bad faith precludes the application of discretionary-function immunity. In that case, following the determination that the Franklin Savings Association was not safe or sound to conduct business, a conservator was appointed. Id. at 1127. Thereafter, plaintiffs Franklin Savings Association and its parent company filed suit against defendants the United States government and the conservator to have the conservatorship removed. Id. Plaintiffs alleged that the conservator intentionally and in bad faith liquidated the company instead of preserving the company and eventually returning it to plaintiffs to transact business. Id. at 1128.

On appeal, the Franklin Savings court explained that plaintiffs did not dispute that the conservator had the authority and discretion to sell assets, but the argument was whether immunity for decisions that were discretionary could be avoided because plaintiffs alleged that the conduct was intentionally done to achieve an improper purpose—to deplete capital and retroactively exculpate the conservator’s appointment. Id. at 1134. Thus, the court focused on the second part of the federal test. In considering whether the alleged intentional misconduct barred the application of discretionary-function immunity under the federal test, the Franklin Savings court first noted that the United States Supreme Court had “repeatedly insisted ... that [tort] claims are not vehicles to second-guess policymaking.” Id. The court further observed that the Supreme Court’s modification to Berkovitz, in Gaubert, to include a query of whether the nature of the challenged conduct was “susceptible to policy analysis[,] ... served to emphasize that courts should not inquire into the actual state of mind or decisionmaking process of federal officials charged with performing discretionary functions.” Id. at 1135 (internal quotations omitted). The Franklin Savings court ultimately concluded that discretionary-function immunity attaches to bar claims that “depend[] on an employee’s bad faith or state of mind in performing facially authorized acts,” id. at 1140, and to conclude otherwise would mean that the immunity could not effectively function. Id. at 1140-41.

Notwithstanding its conclusion, the Franklin Savings court noted that such a holding had “one potentially troubling effect”; it created an “irrebuttable presumption” that government employees try to perform all discretionary functions in good faith and that the court’s holding would preclude relief in cases where an official committed intentional or bad-faith conduct. Id. at 1141. Such a result was necessary, the court reasoned, because providing immunity for employees, so that they do not have to live and act in constant fear of litigation in response to their decisions, outweighs providing relief in the few instances of intentionally wrongful conduct. Id. at 1141-42. Thus, the Franklin Savings court broadly applied the Supreme Court rule that an actor's subjective intent should not be considered. This broad application led the court to conclude that a bad-faith claim was not sufficient to overcome discretionary-function immunity's application.

Courts that consider whether an employee subjectively intended to further policy by his or her conduct

Other courts have come to a different conclusion. Most significant is Coulthurst v. United States, 214 F.3d 106, in which the Second Circuit Court of Appeals addressed the issue of whether the inspection of weightlifting equipment by prison officials was grounded in policy considerations. In Coulthurst, an inmate in a federal prison was injured while using the prison's exercise equipment. Id. at 107. The inmate filed suit against the United States government, alleging "negligence and carelessness" and a "fail[ure] to diligently and periodically inspect" the exercise equipment. Id. at 108. The lower court dismissed the complaint, reasoning that the decisions that established the procedures and timing for inspection involved "elements of judgment or choice and a balancing of policy considerations," such that discretionary-function immunity attached to bar liability. Id. at 109. Coulthurst appealed.

In resolving the appeal, the Court of Appeals concluded that the complaint could be read to mean different types of negligent or careless conduct. Id. The court explained that the complaint asserting negligence or carelessness could legitimately be read to refer to how frequently inspections should occur, which might fall under discretionary-function immunity. Id. But the same complaint, the court noted, could also be read to assert negligence and carelessness in the failure to carry out prescribed responsibilities, such as prison officials failing to inspect the equipment out of laziness, haste, or inattentiveness. Id. Under the latter reading, the court stated that the official assigned to inspect the machine may in laziness or haste have failed to do the inspection he claimed (by his initials in the log) to have performed; the official may have been distracted or inattentive, and thus failed to notice the frayed cable; or he may have seen the frayed cable but been too lazy to make the repairs or deal with the paperwork involved in reporting the damage.

Id. The court concluded that such conduct did not involve an element of judgment or choice nor was it based on policy considerations, and in such an instance, discretionary-function immunity does not attach to shield the government from suit. Id. at 109-11. In the end, the Coulthurst court held that the inmate's complaint sufficiently alleged conduct by prison officials that was not immunized by the discretionary-function immunity exception, and the court vacated the lower court's dismissal and remanded the case for further proceedings. Id.

The difference in the Franklin Savings and Coulthurst approaches emanates from how broadly those courts apply the statement in Gaubert that “[t]he focus of the inquiry is not on the agent’s subjective intent in exercising the discretion conferred ..., but on the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy analysis.” 499 U.S. at 325. Franklin Savings interpreted this requirement expansively to preclude any consideration of whether an actor’s conduct was done maliciously or in bad faith, whereas Coulthurst applied a narrower view of subjective intent, concluding that a complaint alleging a nondiscretionary decision that caused the injury was not grounded in public policy. Our approach in Falline concerning immunity for bad-faith conduct is consistent with the reasoning in Coulthurst that intentional torts and bad-faith conduct are acts “unrelated to any plausible policy objective[]” and that such acts do not involve the kind of judgment that is intended to be shielded from “judicial second-guessing.” 214 F.3d at 111 (internal quotations omitted). We therefore affirm our holding in Falline that NRS 41.032 does not protect a government employee for intentional torts or bad-faith misconduct, as such misconduct, “by definition, [cannot] be within the actor’s discretion.” Falline, 107 Nev. at 1009, 823 P.2d at 891-92.

In light of our conclusion, we must now determine whether to grant, under comity principles, FTB immunity from Hyatt’s claims. Because we conclude that discretionary-function immunity under NRS 41.032 does not include intentional torts and bad-faith conduct, a Nevada government agency would not receive immunity under these circumstances, and thus, we do not extend such immunity to FTB under comity principles, as to do so would be contrary to the policy of this state.

Hyatt's intentional tort causes of action

Given that FTB may not invoke immunity, we turn next to FTB's various arguments contesting the judgment in favor of Hyatt on each of his causes of action.⁶ Hyatt brought three invasion of privacy causes of action—intrusion upon seclusion, publicity of private facts, and false light—and additional causes of action for breach of confidential relationship, abuse of process, fraud, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. We discuss each of these causes of action below.

This court reviews questions of law de novo. Martinez, 123 Nev. at 438, 168 P.3d at 724. A jury's verdict will be upheld if it is supported by substantial evidence. Prabhu v. Levine, 112 Nev. 1538, 1543, 930 P.2d 103, 107 (1996). Additionally, we “will not reverse an order or judgment unless error is affirmatively shown.” Schwartz v. Estate of Greenspun, 110 Nev. 1042, 1051, 881 P.2d 638, 644 (1994).

Invasion of privacy causes of action

The tort of invasion of privacy embraces four different tort actions: “(a) unreasonable intrusion

⁶ We reject Hyatt's contention that this court previously determined that each of his causes of action were valid as a matter of law based on the facts of the case in resolving the prior writ petitions. To the contrary, this court limited its holding to whether FTB was entitled to immunity, and thus, we did not address the merits of Hyatt's claims.

upon the seclusion of another; or (b) appropriation of the other's name or likeness; or (c) unreasonable publicity given to the other's private life; or (d) publicity that unreasonably places the other in a false light before the public." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652A (1977) (citations omitted); PETA v. Bobby Berosini, Ltd., 111 Nev. 615, 629, 895 P.2d 1269, 1278 (1995), overruled on other grounds by City of Las Vegas Downtown Redev. Agency v. Hecht, 113 Nev. 644, 650, 940 P.2d 134, 138 (1997). At issue in this appeal are the intrusion, disclosure, and false light aspects of the invasion of privacy tort. The jury found in Hyatt's favor on those claims and awarded him $52 million for invasion of privacy damages. Because the parties' arguments regarding intrusion and disclosure overlap, we discuss those privacy torts together, and we follow that discussion by addressing the false light invasion of privacy tort.

Intrusion upon seclusion and public disclosure of private facts

On appeal, Hyatt focuses his invasion of privacy claims on FTB's disclosures of his name, address, and social security number to various individuals and entities. FTB contends that Hyatt's claims fail because the information disclosed had been disseminated in prior public records, and thus, could not form the basis of an invasion of privacy claim.

Intrusion upon seclusion and public disclosure of private facts are torts grounded in a plaintiff's objective expectation of privacy. PETA, 111 Nev. at 630, 631, 895 P.2d at 1279 (recognizing that the plaintiff must actually expect solitude or seclusion, and the plaintiff's expectation of privacy must be objectively reasonable); Montesano v. Donrey Media Grp., 99 Nev. 644, 649, 668 P.2d 1081, 1084 (1983) (stating that the public disclosure of a private fact must be “offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities”); see also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652B, 652D (1977). One defense to invasion of privacy torts, referred to as the public records defense, arises when a defendant can show that the disclosed information is contained in a court’s official records. Montesano, 99 Nev. at 649, 668 P.2d at 1085. Such materials are public facts, id., and a defendant cannot be liable for disclosing information about a plaintiff that was already public. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652D cmt. b (1977).

Here, the record shows that Hyatt’s name, address, and social security number had been publicly disclosed on several occasions, before FTB’s disclosures occurred, in old court documents from his divorce proceedings and in a probate case. Hyatt also disclosed the information himself when he made the information available in various business license applications completed by Hyatt. Hyatt maintains that these earlier public disclosures were from long ago, and that the disclosures were only in a limited number of documents, and therefore, the information should not be considered as part of the public domain. Hyatt asserts that this results in his objective expectation of privacy in the information being preserved.

This court has never limited the application of the public records defense based on the length of time between the public disclosure and the alleged invasion of privacy. In fact, in Montesano, 99 Nev. 644, 668 P.2d

1081, we addressed disclosed information contained in a public record from 20 years before the disclosure at issue there and held that the protection still applied. Therefore, under the public records defense, as delineated in Montesano, Hyatt is precluded from recovering for invasion of privacy based on the disclosure of his name, address, and social security number, as the information was already publicly available, and he thus lacked an objective expectation of privacy in the information.⁷

Because Hyatt cannot meet the necessary requirements to establish his invasion of privacy causes of action for intrusion upon seclusion and public disclosure of private facts, we reverse the district court's judgment based on the jury verdict as to these causes of action.⁸

⁷ Beyond his name, address, and social security number, Hyatt also alleged improper disclosures related to the publication of his credit card number on one occasion and his licensing contracts on another occasion. But this information was only disclosed to one or two third parties, and it was information that the third parties already had in their possession from prior dealings with Hyatt. Thus, we likewise conclude that Hyatt lacked an objective expectation of privacy as a matter of law. PETA, 111 Nev. at 631, 895 P.2d at 1279; Montesano, 99 Nev. at 649, 668 P.2d at 1084

⁸ Hyatt also argues that FTB violated his right to privacy when its agents looked through his trash, looked at a package on his doorstep, and spoke with neighbors, a postal carrier, and a trash collector. Hyatt does not provide any authority to support his assertion that he had a legally recognized objective expectation of privacy with regard to FTB's conduct in these instances, and thus, we decline to consider this contention. See Edwards v. Emperor's Garden Rest., 122 Nev. 317, 330 n.38, 130 P.3d 1280, 1288 n.38 (2006) (explaining that this court need not consider

False light invasion of privacy

Regarding Hyatt's false light claim, he argues that FTB portrayed him in a false light throughout its investigation because FTB's various disclosures portrayed Hyatt as a "tax cheat." FTB asserts that Hyatt failed to provide any evidence to support his claim. Before reaching the parties' arguments as to Hyatt's false light claim, we must first determine whether to adopt this cause of action in Nevada, as this court has only impliedly recognized the false light invasion of privacy tort. See PETA, 111 Nev. at 622 n.4, 629, 895 P.2d at 1273 n.4, 1278. "Whether to adopt [this tort] as [a] viable tort claim[] is a question of state law." Denver Publ'g Co. v. Bueno, 54 P.3d 893, 896 (Colo. 2002).

Adopting the false light invasion of privacy tort

Under the Restatement, an action for false light arises when

[o]ne who gives publicity to a matter concerning another that places the other before the public in a false light ... if

(a) the false light in which the other was placed would be highly offensive to a reasonable person, and

(b) the actor had knowledge of or acted in reckless disregard as to the falsity of the publicized matter and the false light in which the other would be placed.

claims that are not cogently argued or supported by relevant authority).

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652E (1977). The greatest constraint on the tort of false light is its similarity to the tort of defamation.

A majority of the courts that have adopted the false light privacy tort have done so after concluding that false light and defamation are distinct torts.⁹ See Welling v. Weinfeld, 866 N.E.2d 1051 (Ohio 2007) (explaining the competing views); West v. Media Gen. Convergence, Inc., 53 S.W.3d 640 (Tenn. 2001) (same). For these courts, defamation law seeks to protect an objective interest in one's reputation, "either economic, political, or personal, in the outside world." Crumpp v. Beckley Newspapers, Inc., 320 S.E.2d 70, 83 (W. Va. 1984) (internal quotations omitted). By contrast, false light invasion of privacy protects one's subjective interest in freedom from injury to the person's right to be left alone. Id. Therefore, according to these courts there are situations (being falsely portrayed as a victim of a crime, such as sexual assault, or being falsely identified as having a serious illness, or being portrayed as destitute) in which a person may be placed in a harmful false light even though it does not rise to the level of defamation. Welling, 866 N.E.2d at 1055-57; West, 53 S.W.3d at 646. Without recognizing the separate false light privacy tort, such an individual would be left without a remedy. West, 53 S.W.3d at 646.

On the other hand, those courts that have declined to adopt the false light tort have done so based on its similarity to defamation. See, e.g., Sullivan v. Pulitzer Broad. Co., 709 S.W.2d 475 (Mo. 1986); Renwick v. News & Observer Publ'g Co., 312 S.E.2d 405 (N.C. 1984); Cain v. Hearst Corp., 878 S.W.2d 577 (Tex. 1994). “The primary objection courts level at false light is that it substantially overlaps with defamation, both in conduct alleged and interests protected.” Denver Publ'g Co., 54 P.3d at 898. For these courts, tort law serves to deter “socially wrongful conduct,” and thus, it needs “clarity and certainty.” Id. And because the parameters defining the difference between false light and defamation are blurred, these courts conclude that “such an amorphous tort risks chilling fundamental First Amendment freedoms.” Id. In such a case, a media defendant would have to “anticipate whether statements are ‘highly offensive’ to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities even though their publication does no harm to the individual’s reputation.” Id. at 903. Ultimately, for these courts, defamation, appropriation, and intentional infliction of emotional distress provide plaintiffs with adequate remedies. Id. at 903.

Considering the different approaches detailed above, we, like the majority of courts, conclude that a false light cause of action is necessary to fully protect privacy interests, and we now officially recognize false light invasion of privacy as a valid cause of action in connection with the other three privacy causes of action that this court has adopted. Because we now recognize the false light invasion of privacy cause of action, we address FTB's substantive arguments regarding Hyatt's false light claim.

Hyatt's false light claim

The crux of Hyatt's false light invasion of privacy claim is that FTB's demand-for-information letters, its other contact with third parties through neighborhood visits and questioning, and the inclusion of his case on FTB's litigation roster suggested that he was a "tax cheat," and therefore, portrayed him in a false light. On appeal, FTB argues that Hyatt presented no evidence that anyone thought that he was a "tax cheat" based on the litigation roster or third-party contacts.

FTB's litigation roster was an ongoing monthly litigation list that identified the cases that FTB was involved in. The list was available to the public and generally contained audit cases in which the protest and appeal process had been completed and the cases were being litigated in court. After Hyatt initiated this litigation, FTB began including the case on its roster, which Hyatt asserts was improper because the protests in his audits had not yet been completed. FTB, however, argues that because the lawsuit was ongoing, it did not place Hyatt in a false light by including him on the roster. Further, FTB argues that the litigation roster that Hyatt relied on was not false. When FTB began including Hyatt on the litigation roster, he was not falsely portrayed because he was indeed involved in litigation with FTB in this case. Hyatt did not demonstrate that the litigation roster contained any false information. Rather, he only argued that his inclusion on the list was improper because his audit cases had not reached the final challenge stage like other cases on the roster.

FTB's contacts with third parties' through letters, demands for information, or in person was not highly offensive to a reasonable person and did not falsely portray Hyatt as a "tax cheat." In contacting third parties, FTB was merely conducting its routine audit investigations.

The record before us reveals that no evidence presented by Hyatt in the underlying suit supported the jury's conclusion that FTB portrayed Hyatt in a false light. See Prabhu, 112 Nev. at 1543, 930 P.2d at 107. Because Hyatt has failed to establish a false light claim, we reverse the district court's judgment on this claim.¹⁰

Having addressed Hyatt's invasion of privacy causes of action, we now consider FTB's challenges to Hyatt's remaining causes of action for breach of confidential relationship, abuse of process, fraud, and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Breach of confidential relationship

A breach of confidential relationship cause of action arises "by reason of kinship or professional, business, or social relationships between the parties." Perry v. Jordan, 111 Nev. 943, 947, 900 P.2d 335, 337 (1995). On appeal, FTB contends that Hyatt could not prevail as a matter of law on his claim for breach of a confidential relationship because he cannot establish the requisite confidential relationship. In the underlying case, the district court denied FTB's motion for summary judgment and its motion for judgment as a matter of law, which presented similar arguments, and at trial the jury found FTB liable on this cause of action. Hyatt argues that his claim for breach of confidentiality falls within the parameters of Perry because FTB promised to protect his confidential information and its position over Hyatt during the audits established the necessary confidential relationship.¹¹

In Perry, this court recognized that a confidential relationship exists when a party gains the confidence of another party and purports to advise or act consistently with the other party's interest. Id. at 947, 900 P.2d at 338. In that case, store owner Perry sold her store to her neighbor and friend, Jordan, knowing that Jordan had no business knowledge, that Jordan was buying the store for her daughters, not for herself, and that Jordan would rely on Perry to run the store for a contracted one-year period after the sale was complete. Id. at 945-46, 900 P.2d at 336-37. Not long after the sale, Perry stopped running the store, and the store eventually closed. Id. at 946, 900 P.2d at 337. Jordan filed suit against Perry for, among other things, breach of a confidential relationship. Id. A jury found in Jordan's favor and awarded damages. Id. Perry appealed, arguing that this court had not recognized a claim for breach of a confidential relationship. Id.

On appeal, this court ruled that a breach of confidential relationship claim was available under the facts of the case. Id. at 947, 900 P.2d at 338. The court noted that Perry “held a duty to act with the utmost good faith, based on her confidential relationship with Jordan[,and that the] duty requires affirmative disclosure and avoidance of self dealing.” Id. at 948, 900 P.2d at 338. The court explained that “[w]hen a confidential relationship exists, the person in whom the special trust is placed owes a duty to the other party similar to the duty of a fiduciary, requiring the person to act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the other party.” Id. at 947, 900 P.2d at 338.

FTB contends that the relationship between a tax auditor and the person being audited does not create the necessary relationship articulated in Perry to establish a breach of confidential relationship cause of action. In support of this proposition, FTB cites to Johnson v. Sawyer, which was heard by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. 47 F.3d 716 (5th Cir. 1995) (en banc). In Johnson, the plaintiff sought damages from press releases by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) based on a conviction for filing a fraudulent tax return. Id. at 718. Johnson was criminally charged based on erroneous tax returns. Id. at 718-19. He eventually pleaded guilty to a reduced charge as part of a plea bargain. Id. at 718-20. Following the plea agreement, two press releases were issued that contained improper and private information about Johnson. Id. at 720-21. Johnson filed suit against the IRS based on these press releases, arguing that they cost him his job and asserting several causes of action, one being breach of a confidential relationship. Id. at 718, 725, 738. On appeal, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's ruling that a breach of a confidential relationship could not be maintained based on the relationship between Johnson and the IRS, as it was clear that the two parties "stood in an adversarial relationship." Id. at 738 n.47.

Hyatt rejects FTB's reliance on this case, arguing that the Johnson ruling is inapposite to the present case because, here, FTB made express promises regarding protecting Hyatt's confidential information but then failed to keep those promises. Hyatt maintains that although FTB may not have acted in his best interest in every aspect of the audits, as to keeping his information confidential, FTB affirmatively undertook that responsibility and breached that duty by revealing confidential information.

But in conducting the audits, FTB was not required to act with Hyatt's interests in mind; rather, it had a duty to proceed on behalf of the state of California's interest. Johnson, 47 F.3d at 738 n.47. Moreover, the parties' relationship was not akin to a family or business relationship. Perry, 111 Nev. at 947, 900 P.2d at 337-38. Hyatt argues for a broad range of relationships that can meet the requirement under Perry, but we reject this contention. Perry does not provide for so expansive a relationship as Hyatt asks us to recognize as sufficient to establish a claim for a breach of confidential relationship.¹² Thus, FTB and Hyatt's relationship cannot form the basis for a breach of a confidential relationship cause of action, and this cause of action fails as a matter of law. The district court judgment in Hyatt's favor on this claim is reversed.

Abuse of process

A successful abuse of process claim requires “(1) an ulterior purpose by the defendants other than resolving a legal dispute, and (2) a willful act in the use of the legal process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding.” LaMantia v. Redisi, 118 Nev. 27, 30, 38 P.3d 877, 879 (2002) (quoting Posadas v. City of Reno, 109 Nev. 448, 457, 851 P.2d 438, 444-45 (1993)). Put another way, a plaintiff must show that the defendant “willfully and improperly used the legal process to accomplish” an ulterior purpose other than resolving a legal dispute. Id. at 31, 38 P.3d at 880 (emphasis added).

FTB asserts that it was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Hyatt's abuse of process cause of action because it did not actually use the judicial process, as it never sought to judicially enforce compliance with the demand-for-information forms and did not otherwise use the judicial process in conducting its audits of Hyatt. In response, Hyatt argues that FTB committed abuse of process by sending demand-for-information forms to individuals and companies in Nevada that are not subject to the California law cited in the form.

Because FTB did not use any legal enforcement process, such as filing a court action, in relation to its demands for information or otherwise during the audits, Hyatt cannot meet the requirements for establishing an abuse of process claim. LaMantia, 118 Nev. at 31, 38 P.3d at 880; ComputerXpress, Inc. v. Jackson, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625, 644 (Ct. App. 2001) (explaining that abuse of process only arises when there is actual “use of the machinery of the legal system for an ulterior motive” (internal quotations omitted)); see also Tuck Beckstoffer Wines L.L.C. v. Ultimate Distributions, Inc., 682 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2010). On this cause of action, then, FTB is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and we reverse the district court’s judgment.

Fraud

To prove a fraud claim, the plaintiff must show that the defendant made a false representation that the defendant knew or believed was false, that the defendant intended to persuade the plaintiff to act or not act based on the representation, and that the plaintiff had reason to rely on the representation and suffered damages. Bulbman, Inc. v. Nev. Bell, 108 Nev. 105, 111, 825 P.2d 588, 592 (1992). It is the jury’s role to make findings on the factors necessary to establish a fraud claim. Powers v. United Servs. Auto. Ass’n, 114 Nev. 690, 697-98, 962 P.2d 596, 600-01 (1998). This court will generally not disturb a jury’s verdict that is supported by substantial evidence.

Taylor v. Thunder, 116 Nev. 968, 974, 13 P.3d 43, 46 (2000). Substantial evidence is defined as “evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.” Winchell v. Schiff, 124 Nev. 938, 944, 193 P.3d 946, 950 (2008) (internal quotations omitted).

When Hyatt’s 1991 audit began, FTB informed him that during the audit process Hyatt could expect FTB employees to treat him with courtesy, that the auditor assigned to his case would clearly and concisely request information from him, that any personal and financial information that he provided to FTB would be treated confidentially, and that the audit would be completed within a reasonable time. FTB contends that its statements in documents to Hyatt, that it would provide him with courteous treatment and keep his information confidential, were insufficient representations to form a basis for a fraud claim, and even if the representations were sufficient, there was no evidence that FTB knew that they were false when made. In any case, FTB argues that Hyatt did not prove any reliance because he was required to participate in the audits whether he relied on these statements or not. Hyatt asserts that FTB knowingly misrepresented its promise to treat him fairly and impartially and to protect his private information. For the reasons discussed below, we reject FTB’s argument that it was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Hyatt’s fraud claim.

The record before us shows that a reasonable mind could conclude that FTB made specific representations to Hyatt that it intended for Hyatt to rely on, but which it did not intend to fully meet. FTB represented to Hyatt that it would protect his confidential information and treat him courteously. At trial, Hyatt presented evidence that FTB disclosed his social security number and home address to numerous people and entities and that FTB revealed to third parties that Hyatt was being audited. In addition, FTB sent letters concerning the 1991 audit to several doctors with the same last name, based on its belief that one of those doctors provided Hyatt treatment, but without first determining which doctor actually treated Hyatt before sending the correspondence. Furthermore, Hyatt showed that FTB took 11 years to resolve Hyatt's protests of the two audits. Hyatt alleged that this delay resulted in $8,000 in interest per day accruing against him for the outstanding taxes owed to California. Also at trial, Hyatt presented evidence through Candace Les, a former FTB auditor and friend of the main auditor on Hyatt's audit, Sheila Cox, that Cox had made disparaging comments about Hyatt and his religion, that Cox essentially was intent on imposing an assessment against Hyatt, and that FTB promoted a culture in which tax assessments were the end goal whenever an audit was undertaken. Hyatt also testified that he would not have hired legal and accounting professionals to assist in the audits had he known how he would be treated. Moreover, Hyatt stated that he incurred substantial costs that he would not otherwise have incurred by paying for professional representatives to assist him during the audits.

The evidence presented sufficiently showed FTB's improper motives in conducting Hyatt's audits, and a reasonable mind could conclude that FTB made fraudulent representations, that it knew the representations were false, and that it intended for Hyatt to rely on the representations.¹³ What's more, the jury could reasonably conclude that Hyatt relied on FTB's representations to act and participate in the audits in a manner different than he would have otherwise, which resulted in damages. Based on this evidence, we conclude that substantial evidence supports each of the fraud elements and that FTB is not entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this cause of action.¹⁴

Fraud damages

Given our affirmance of the district court's judgment on the jury verdict in Hyatt's favor on his ¹³ FTB's argument concerning government agents making representations beyond the scope of law is without merit.

¹⁴ FTB further argues that several evidentiary errors by the district court warrant a new trial. These errors include admitting evidence concerning whether the audit conclusions were correct and excluding FTB's evidence seeking to rebut an adverse inference for spoliation of evidence. FTB also asserts that the district court improperly instructed the jury by permitting it to consider the audit determinations. Although we agree with FTB that the district court abused its discretion in these evidentiary rulings and in its jury instruction number 24, as discussed more fully below in regard to Hyatt's intentional infliction of emotional distress claim, we conclude that these errors were harmless as to Hyatt's fraud claim because sufficient evidence of fraud existed for the jury to find in Hyatt's favor on each required element for fraud. See Cook v. Sunrise Hosp. & Med. Ctr., L.L.C., 124 Nev. 997, 1006, 194 P.3d 1214, 1219 (2008) (holding that when there is error in a jury instruction, "prejudice must be established in order to reverse a district court judgment," and this is done by "showing that, but for the error, a different result might have been reached"); El Cortez Hotel, Inc. v. Coburn, 87 Nev. 209, 213, 484 P.2d 1089, 1091 (1971) (stating that an evidentiary error must be prejudicial in order to warrant reversal and remand).

fraud claim, we turn to FTB's challenge as to the special damages awarded Hyatt on his fraud claim.¹⁵ In doing so, we address whether FTB is entitled to statutory caps on the amount of damages recoverable to the same extent that a Nevada government agency would receive statutory caps under principles of comity.¹⁶ NRS 41.035 provides a statutory cap on liability damages in tort actions "against a present or former officer or employee of the State or any political subdivision." FTB argues that because it is immune from liability under California law, and Nevada provides a statutory cap on liability damages, it is entitled to the statutory cap on its liability to the extent that the law does not conflict with Nevada policy. Hyatt asserts that applying the statutory caps would in fact violate Nevada policy because doing so would not sufficiently protect Nevada residents. According to Hyatt, limitless compensatory damages are necessary as a means to control non-Nevada government actions. Hyatt claims that statutory caps for Nevada government actions work because Nevada can control its government entities and employees through other means, such as dismissal or other discipline, that are not available to control an out-of-state government entity. Additionally, Hyatt points out that there are other reasons for the statutory caps that are specific only to Nevada, such as attracting state employees by limiting potential liability. Therefore, Hyatt argues that FTB is not entitled to statutory caps under comity because it would violate Nevada's superior policy of protecting its residents from injury.

¹⁵ The jury verdict form included a separate damage award for Hyatt's fraud claim. We limit our discussion of Hyatt's fraud damages to these special damages that were awarded. To the extent that Hyatt argues that he is entitled to other damages for his fraud claim beyond the special damages specified in the jury verdict form, we reject this argument and limit any emotional distress damages to his recovery under his intentional infliction of emotional distress claim, as addressed below.

¹⁶ FTB argues that under the law-of-the-case doctrine, comity applies to afford it a statutory cap on damages and immunity from punitive damages based on this court's conclusions in the earlier writ petitions. But this court did not previously address these issues and the issues are different, thus, law of the case does not apply. Dictor v. Creative Mgmt. Servs., 126 Nev. 41, 44-45, 223 P.3d 332, 334-35 (2010).

The parties base their arguments on precedent from other courts that have taken different approaches to the issue. FTB primarily relies on a New Mexico Supreme Court case, Sam v. Estate of Sam, 134 P.3d 761 (N.M. 2006), and Hyatt supports his arguments by mainly relying on Faulkner v. University of Tennessee, 627 So. 2d 362 (Ala. 1992).

In Sam, an employee of an Arizona government entity accidentally backed over his child while driving his employer's vehicle at his home in New Mexico. 134 P.3d at 763. In a lawsuit arising out of this accident, the issue before the Sam court was whether Arizona's one-year statute of limitation for government employees, or New Mexico's two-year statute of limitation for government employees or three-year general tort statute of limitation law should apply. Id. at 764. The court discussed the comity doctrine and concluded that New Mexico's two-year statute of limitations for government employees applied because by doing so it was recognizing Arizona's law to the extent that it did not conflict with New Mexico's law. Id. at 764-68.

In reaching this conclusion, the Sam court relied on the United States Supreme Court's holdings in Nevada v. Hall, 440 U.S. 410 (1979), and Franchise Tax Board of California v. Hyatt, 538 U.S. 488 (2003). Sam, 134 P.3d at 765-66. The Sam court stated that "[b]oth these cases stand for the principle that a forum state is not required to extend immunity to other states sued in its courts, but the forum state should extend immunity as a matter of comity if doing so will not violate the forum state's public policies." Id. at 765. Based on this framework for comity, the Sam court concluded that Arizona should be entitled to the statute of limitations for government agencies that New Mexico would provide to its government agencies. Most courts appear to follow FTB's argument regarding how comity applies and that a state should recognize another state's laws to the extent that they do not conflict with its own. See generally Solomon v. Supreme Court of Fla., 816 A.2d 788, 790 (D.C. 2002); Schoeberlein v. Purdue Univ., 544 N.E.2d 283, 285 (Ill. 1989); McDonnell v. Illinois, 748 A.2d 1105, 1107 (N.J. 2000); Sam, 134 P.3d at 765; Hansen v. Scott, 687 N.W.2d 247, 250 (N.D. 2004).

In Faulkner, the plaintiff filed a lawsuit against the University of Tennessee after it threatened to revoke plaintiff's doctoral degree. 627 So. 2d at 363-64. The issue in Faulkner was whether the University of Tennessee (UT) was entitled to discretionary immunity under comity, when both Tennessee and Alabama had similar discretionary-immunity provisions for their states' government entities. Id. at

366. Considering the policy of allowing residents legal redress, compared to the immunity policies that both states had, the Faulkner court observed that

[w]e cannot, absent some overriding policy, leave Alabama residents without redress within this State, relating to alleged acts of wrongdoing by an agency of another State, where those alleged acts are associated with substantial commercial activities in Alabama. We conclude that comity is not such an overriding policy in this instance.

Id. The court rejected the argument that granting comity would not violate Alabama policy because its residents were used to Alabama government entities receiving immunity:

Agencies of the State of Alabama are subject to legislative control, administrative oversight, and public accountability in Alabama; UT is not. Actions taken by an agency or instrumentality of this state are subject always to the will of the democratic process in Alabama. UT, as an instrumentality of the State of Tennessee, operates outside such controls in this State.

Id. The Faulkner court ultimately declined to grant UT immunity under comity. We are persuaded by the Faulkner court's reasoning.

This state's policy interest in providing adequate redress to Nevada citizens is paramount to providing FTB a statutory cap on damages under comity. Therefore, as we conclude that allowing FTB a statutory cap would violate this state's public policy in this area, comity does not require this court to grant

FTB such relief. Id.; Sam, 134 P.3d at 765 (recognizing that a state is not required to extend immunity and comity only dictates doing so if it does not contradict the forum state's public policy). As this is the only argument FTB raised in regard to the special damages awarded under the fraud cause of action, we affirm the amount of damages awarded for fraud. The prejudgment interest awarded is vacated and remanded to the district court for a recalculation based on the damages for fraud that we uphold. In light of our ruling that only the special award of damages for fraud is affirmed, FTB's argument that prejudgment interest is not allowed because future damages were interwoven with past damages is moot.

Intentional infliction of emotional distress

During discovery in the underlying case, Hyatt refused to disclose his medical records. As a result, he was precluded at trial from presenting any medical evidence of severe emotional distress. Nevertheless, at trial, Hyatt presented evidence designed to demonstrate his emotional distress in the form of his own testimony regarding the emotional distress he experienced, along with testimony from his son and friends detailing their observation of changes in Hyatt's behavior and health during the audits. Based on this testimony, the jury found in Hyatt's favor on his intentional infliction of emotional distress (IIED) claim and awarded him $82 million for emotional distress damages.

To recover on a claim for IIED, a plaintiff must prove "(1) extreme and outrageous conduct on the part of the defendant; (2) intent to cause emotional distress or reckless disregard for causing emotional distress;

(3) that the plaintiff actually suffered extreme or severe emotional distress; and (4) causation.” Miller v. Jones, 114 Nev. 1291, 1299-1300, 970 P.2d 571, 577 (1998); see also Barmettler v. Reno Air, Inc., 114 Nev. 441, 447, 956 P.2d 1382, 1386 (1998). A plaintiff must set forth “objectively verifiable indicia” to establish that the plaintiff “actually suffered extreme or severe emotional distress.” Miller, 114 Nev. at 1300, 970 P.2d at 577.

On appeal, FTB argues that Hyatt failed to establish that he actually suffered severe emotional distress because he failed to provide any medical evidence or other objectively verifiable evidence to establish such a claim. In response, Hyatt contends that the testimony provided by his family and other acquaintances sufficiently established objective proof of the severe and extreme emotional distress he suffered, particularly in light of the facts of this case demonstrating the intentional harmful treatment he endured from FTB. Hyatt asserts that the more severe the harm, the lower the amount of proof necessary to establish that he suffered severe emotional distress. While this court has held that objectively verifiable evidence is necessary in order to establish an IIED claim, id., we have not specifically addressed whether this necessarily requires medical evidence or if other objective evidence is sufficient.

The Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 (1977), in comments j and k, provide for a sliding-scale approach in which the increased severity of the conduct will require less in the way of proof that emotional distress was suffered in order to establish an IIED claim. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 cmt. j (1977) (“The intensity and the duration of the distress are factors to be considered in determining its severity. Severe distress must be proved; but in many cases the extreme and outrageous character of the defendant's conduct is in itself important evidence that the distress has existed."); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 cmt. k (1977) (stating that "if the enormity of the outrage carries conviction that there has in fact been severe emotional distress, bodily harm is not required"). This court has also impliedly recognized this sliding-scale approach, although stated in the reverse. Nelson v. City of Las Vegas, 99 Nev. 548, 665 P.2d 1141 (1983). In Nelson, this court explained that "[t]he less extreme the outrage, the more appropriate it is to require evidence of physical injury or illness from the emotional distress." Id. at 555, 665 P.2d at 1145.

Further, other jurisdictions that require objectively verifiable evidence have determined that such a mandate does not always require medical evidence. See Lyman v. Huber, 10 A.3d 707 (Me. 2010) (stating that medical testimony is not mandatory to establish an IIED claim, although only in rare, extreme circumstances); Ruckman-Peirson v. Brannon, 822 N.E.2d 830, 840-41 (Ohio Ct. App. 2004) (stating that medical evidence is not required, but also holding that something more than just the plaintiffs own testimony was necessary); see also Dixon v. Denny's, Inc., 957 F. Supp. 792, 796 (E.D. Va. 1996) (stating that plaintiff failed to establish an IIED claim because plaintiff did not provide objective evidence, such as medical bills "or even the testimony of friends or family"). Additionally, in Farmers Home Mutual Insurance Co. v. Fiscus, 102 Nev. 371, 725 P.2d 234

(1986), this court upheld an award for mental and emotional distress even though the plaintiffs' evidence did not include medical evidence or testimony. Id. at 374-75, 725 P.2d at 236. While not specifically addressing an IIED claim, the Fiscus court addressed the recovery of damages for mental and emotional distress that arose from an insurance company's unfair settlement practices when the insurance company denied plaintiffs' insurance claim after their home had flooded. Id. at 373, 725 P.2d at 235. In support of the claim for emotional and mental distress damages, the husband plaintiff testified that he and his wife lost the majority of their personal possessions and that their house was uninhabitable, that because the claim had been rejected they lacked the money needed to repair their home and the house was condemned, and after meeting with the insurance company's representative the wife had an emotional breakdown. Id. at 374, 725 P.2d at 236. This court upheld the award of damages, concluding that the above evidence was sufficient to prove that plaintiffs had suffered mental and emotional distress. Id. at 374-75, 725 P.2d at 236. In so holding, this court rejected the insurance company's argument that there was insufficient proof of mental and emotional distress because there was no medical evidence or independent witness testimony. Id.

Based on the foregoing, we now specifically adopt the sliding-scale approach to proving a claim for IIED. Under this sliding-scale approach, while medical evidence is one acceptable manner in establishing that severe emotional distress was suffered for purposes of an IIED claim, other objectively verifiable evidence may suffice to establish a claim when the defendant's conduct is more extreme, and thus, requires less evidence of the physical injury suffered.

Turning to the facts in the present case, Hyatt suffered extreme treatment from FTB. As explained above in discussing the fraud claim, FTB disclosed personal information that it promised to keep confidential and delayed resolution of Hyatt's protests for 11 years, resulting in a daily interest charge of $8,000. Further, Hyatt presented testimony that the auditor who conducted the majority of his two audits made disparaging remarks about Hyatt and his religion, was determined to impose tax assessments against him, and that FTB fostered an environment in which the imposition of tax assessments was the objective whenever an audit was undertaken. These facts support the conclusion that this case is at the more extreme end of the scale, and therefore less in the way of proof as to emotional distress suffered by Hyatt is necessary.

In support of his IIED claim, Hyatt presented testimony from three different people as to the how the treatment from FTB caused Hyatt emotional distress and physically affected him. This included testimony of how Hyatt's mood changed dramatically, that he became distant and much less involved in various activities, started drinking heavily, suffered severe migraines and had stomach problems, and became obsessed with the legal issues involving FTB. We conclude that this evidence, in connection with the severe treatment experienced by Hyatt, provided sufficient evidence from which a jury could reasonably determine that Hyatt suffered severe emotional distress.¹⁷ Accordingly, we affirm the judgment in favor of Hyatt on this claim as to liability. As discussed below, however, we reverse the award of damages on this claim and remand for a new trial as to damages on this claim only.

*A new trial is warranted based on evidentiary and jury instruction errors*¹⁸

Early in this case, the district court granted FTB partial summary judgment and dismissed Hyatt's declaratory relief cause of action concerning when he moved from California to Nevada. The district court reached this conclusion because the audits were still under review in California, and therefore, the Nevada court lacked jurisdiction to address whether the audits' conclusions were accurate. The partial summary judgment was not challenged by Hyatt at any point to this court, and thus, the district court's ruling was in effect throughout the trial. Consequently, whether the audits' determinations were correct was not an issue in the Nevada litigation.

On appeal, FTB argues that the district court erroneously allowed evidence and a jury instruction that went directly to whether the audits were properly determined. FTB frames this issue as whether the district court exceeded the case's jurisdictional boundaries, but the issue more accurately involves the admissibility of evidence and whether a jury instruction given by the district court was proper in light of the jurisdictional ruling. We review both the admissibility of evidence and the propriety of jury instructions for an abuse of discretion. See Hansen v. Universal Health Servs., 115 Nev. 24, 27, 974 P.2d 1158, 1160 (1999) (evidence); Allstate Ins. Co. v. Miller, 125 Nev. 300, 319, 212 P.3d 318, 331 (2009) (jury instruction).

Evidence improperly permitted challenging audits' conclusions

FTB argues that the district court violated its jurisdictional restriction governing this case, because by allowing Hyatt's claims to go forward based on the evidence presented at trial, the jury was in effect required to make findings on Hyatt's residency and whether he owed taxes. FTB points to the testimony of a number of Hyatt's witnesses that focused on whether the audits' results were correct: (1) Hyatt's tax accountant and tax attorney, who were his representatives during the audits, testified to their cooperation with FTB and that they did not attempt to intimidate the auditor to refute two bases for the imposition of penalties by FTB for lack of cooperation and intimidation; (2) an expert tax attorney witness testified about Hyatt's representatives' cooperation during the audits to refute the lack of cooperation allegation; (3) an expert witness testified as to the lifestyles of wealthy people to refute the allegation that Hyatt's actions of living in a low-income apartment building in Las Vegas and having no security were "implausible behaviors"; and especially, (4) expert testimony of former FTB agent Malcom Jumulet regarding audit procedures, and Jumulet's testimony as to how FTB analyzed and weighed the information obtained throughout the audits as challenging the results of the audits reached by FTB. Further, FTB points to Hyatt's arguments regarding an alleged calculation error as to the amount of taxable income, which FTB argues is an explicit example of Hyatt challenging the conclusions of the audits. Hyatt argues that all the evidence he presented did not challenge the audits, but was proffered to demonstrate that the audits were conducted in bad faith and in an attempt to "trump up a case against Hyatt and extort a settlement."

While much of the evidence presented at trial would not violate the restriction against considering the audits' conclusions, there are several instances in which the evidence does violate this ruling. These instances included evidence challenging whether FTB made a mathematical error in the amount of income that it taxed, whether an auditor improperly gave credibility to certain interviews of estranged family members, whether an auditor appropriately determined that certain information was not credible or not relevant, as well as the testimony outlined above that Hyatt presented, which challenged various aspects of the fraud penalties.

The expert testimony regarding the fraud penalties went to the audits' determinations and had no utility in showing any intentional torts unless it was first concluded that the audits' determinations were incorrect. For example, the expert testimony concerning typical lifestyles of wealthy individuals had relevance only to show that FTB erroneously concluded that Hyatt's conduct, such as renting an apartment in a low-income complex, was fraudulent because he was wealthy and allegedly only rented the apartment to give the appearance of living in Nevada. Whether such a conclusion was a correct determination by FTB is precisely what this case was not allowed to address. The testimony does not show wrongful intent or bad faith without first concluding that the decisions were wrong, unless it was proven that FTB knew wealthy individuals' tendencies, that they applied to all wealthy individuals, and that FTB ignored them. None of this was established, and thus, the testimony only went to the audits' correctness, which was not allowed. These are instances where the evidence went solely to challenging whether FTB made the right decisions in its audits. As such, it was an abuse of discretion for the district court to permit this evidence to be admitted. Hansen, 115 Nev. at 27, 974 P.2d at 1160.

Jury instruction permitting consideration of audits' determinations

FTB also argues that the district court wrongly instructed the jury. Specifically, it asserts that the jury instruction given at the end of trial demonstrates that the district court allowed the jury to improperly consider FTB's audit determinations. Hyatt counters FTB's argument by relying on an earlier instruction that was given to the jury that he argues shows that the district court did not allow the jury to determine the appropriateness of the audits' results, as it specifically instructed the jury not to consider the audits' conclusions.

As background, before trial began, and at various times during the trial, the district court read an instruction to the jury that it was not to consider whether the audits' conclusions were correct:

Although this case arises from the residency tax audit conducted by FTB, it is important for you to understand that you will not be asked, nor will you be permitted to make any determinations related to Mr. Hyatt's residency or the correctness of the tax assessments, penalties and interest assessed by FTB against Mr. Hyatt. Thus, although you may hear evidence during the course of this trial that may be related to the determinations and conclusions reached by FTB regarding Mr. Hyatt's residency and tax assessments, you are not permitted to make any determinations regarding Mr. Hyatt's residency such as when he became or did not become a resident of Nevada.

When jury instructions were given, this instruction was intended to be part of the jury instructions, but somehow the instruction was altered and a different version of this instruction was read as Jury Instruction 24. To correct the error, the district court read a revised Jury Instruction 24:

You have heard evidence during the course of this trial that may be related to the determinations and conclusions reached by FTB regarding Mr. Hyatt's residency and tax assessments. You are not permitted to make any determinations regarding Mr. Hyatt's residency, such as when he became or did not become a resident of Nevada. Likewise, you are not permitted to make any determinations related to the propriety of the tax assessments issued by FTB against Mr. Hyatt, including but not limited to, the correctness or incorrectness of the amount of taxes assessed, or the determinations of FTB to assess Mr. Hyatt penalties and/or interest on those tax assessments.

The residency and tax assessment determinations, and all factual and legal issues related thereto, are the subject matter of a separate administrative process between Mr. Hyatt and FTB in the State of California and will be resolved in that administrative process. You are not to concern yourself with those issues.

Counsel for the FTB read and presented argument from the inaccurate Jury Instruction No. 24. To the extent FTB's counsel's arguments cited and relied on statements that are not contained in the correct Jury Instruction No. 24, they are stricken and you must disregard them. You are not to consider the stricken statements and arguments in your deliberations. There is nothing in the correct Jury Instruction No. 24 that would prevent you during your deliberations from considering the appropriateness or correctness of the analysis conducted by the FTB employees in reaching its residency determination and conclusion. There is nothing in Jury Instruction No. 24 that would prevent Malcolm Jumulet from rendering an opinion about the appropriateness or correctness of the analysis conducted by FTB employees in reaching its residency determinations and conclusions.

(Emphasis added.) Based on the italicized language, FTB argues that the district court not only allowed, but invited the jury to consider whether the FTB's audit conclusions were correct.

Jury Instruction 24 violated the jurisdictional limit that the district court imposed on this case. The instruction specifically allowed the jury to consider the "appropriateness or correctness of the analysis conducted by the FTB employees in reaching its residency determination and conclusion." As a result, the district court abused its discretion in giving this jury instruction. Allstate Ins. Co., 125 Nev. at 319, 212 P.3d at 331.

Exclusion of evidence to rebut adverse inference

FTB also challenges the district court's exclusion of evidence that it sought to introduce in an effort to rebut an adverse inference sanction for spoliation of evidence. The evidentiary spoliation arose when FTB changed its e-mail server in 1999, and it subsequently destroyed backup tapes from the old server. Because the server change occurred during the pendency of this litigation, FTB sent multiple e-mails to its employees, before the change, requesting that they print or otherwise save any e-mails related to Hyatt's case.

Backup tapes containing several weeks' worth of e-mails were made from the old system to be used in the event that FTB needed to recover the old system. FTB, at some point, overwrote these tapes, however, and Hyatt eventually discovered the change in e-mail servers and requested discovery of the backup tapes, which had already been deleted. Because FTB had deleted the backup tapes, Hyatt filed a pretrial motion requesting sanctions against FTB. The district court ruled in Hyatt's favor and determined that it would give an adverse inference jury instruction. An adverse inference allows, but does not require, the jury to infer that evidence negligently destroyed by a party would have been harmful to that party. See, e.g., Bass-Davis v. Davis, 122 Nev. 442, 446, 452, 134 P.3d 103, 106, 109 (2006).

At trial, FTB sought to introduce evidence explaining the steps it had taken to preserve any relevant e-mails before the server change. Hyatt challenged this evidence, arguing that it was merely an attempt to reargue the evidence spoliation. The district court agreed with Hyatt and excluded the evidence. FTB does not challenge the jury instruction, but it does challenge the district court's exclusion of evidence that it sought to present at trial to rebut the adverse inference.

On this point, FTB argues that it was entitled to rebut the adverse inference, and therefore, the district court abused its discretion in excluding the rebuttal evidence. Hyatt counters that it is not proper evidence because in order to rebut the inference FTB had to show that the destroyed evidence was not harmful and FTB's excluded evidence did not demonstrate that the destroyed e-mails did not contain anything harmful.

This court has recognized that a district court may impose a rebuttable presumption, under NRS 47.250(3), when evidence was willfully destroyed, or the court may impose a permissible adverse inference when the evidence was negligently destroyed. Bass-Davis, 122 Nev. at 447-48, 134 P.3d at 106-07. Under a rebuttable presumption, the burden shifts to the spoliating party to rebut the presumption by showing that the evidence that was destroyed was not unfavorable. 122 Nev. at 448, 134 P.3d at 107. If the party fails to rebut the presumption, then the jury or district court may presume that the evidence was adverse to the party that destroyed the evidence. Id. A lesser adverse inference, that does not shift the burden of proof, is permissible. Id. at 449, 134 P.3d at 107. The lesser inference merely allows the fact-finder to determine, based on other evidence, that a fact exists. Id.

In the present case, the district court concluded that FTB's conduct was negligent, not willful, and therefore the lesser adverse inference applied, and the burden did not shift to FTB. But the district court nonetheless excluded the proposed evidence that FTB sought to admit to rebut the adverse inference. The district court should have permitted FTB to explain the steps that it took to collect the relevant emails in an effort to demonstrate that none of the destroyed information contained in the e-mails was damaging to FTB. Because the district court did not allow FTB to explain the steps taken, we are not persuaded by Hyatt's contention that FTB's evidence was actually only an attempt to reargue the spoliation issue. To the contrary, FTB could use the proposed evidence related to its efforts to collect all relevant e-mails to explain why nothing harmful was destroyed. Therefore, we conclude that the district court abused its discretion in excluding the evidence, and we reverse the district court's ruling in this regard.

Other evidentiary errors

FTB additionally challenges the district court's exclusion of evidence regarding Hyatt's loss of his patent through a legal challenge to the validity of his patent and his being audited for his federal taxes by the IRS, both of which occurred during the relevant period associated with Hyatt's IIED claim. Hyatt asserts that the district court properly excluded the evidence because it was more prejudicial than probative.

Under NRS 48.035(1), "[a]lthough relevant, evidence is not admissible if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice" Hyatt argues that this provides a basis for the district court's exclusion of this evidence. We conclude, however, that the district court abused its discretion in excluding the evidence of Hyatt's patent loss and federal tax audit on this basis. Although the evidence may be prejudicial, it is doubtful that it is unfairly prejudicial as required under the statute. And in any event, the probative value of this evidence as to Hyatt's IIED claim, in particular in regard to damages caused by FTB as opposed to other events in his life, is more probative than unfairly prejudicial. Accordingly, the district court abused its discretion in excluding this evidence.

Evidentiary and jury instruction errors warrant reversal and remand for a new trial on damages only on the IIED claim

Because the district court abused its discretion in making the evidentiary and jury instruction rulings outlined above, the question becomes whether these errors warrant reversal and remand for a new trial on the IIED claim, or whether the errors were harmless such that the judgment on the IIED claim should be upheld. See Cook v. Sunrise Hosp. & Med. Ctr., L.L.C., 124 Nev. 997, 1006, 194 P.3d 1214, 1219 (2008) (holding that when there is error in a jury instruction “prejudice must be established in order to reverse a district court judgment,” which can be done by “showing that, but for the error, a different result might have been reached”); El Cortez Hotel, Inc. v. Coburn, 87 Nev. 209, 213, 484 P.2d 1089, 1091 (1971) (stating that an evidentiary error must be prejudicial in order to warrant reversal and remand). We hold that substantial evidence exists to support the jury’s finding as to liability against FTB on Hyatt’s IIED claim regardless of these errors, but we conclude that the errors significantly affected the jury’s determination of appropriate damages, and therefore, these errors were prejudicial and require reversal and remand for a new trial as to damages.

In particular, the record shows that at trial Hyatt argued that FTB promised fairness and impartiality in its auditing processes but then, according to Hyatt, proceeded to conduct unfair audits that amounted to FTB “seeking to trump up a tax claim against him or attempt to extort him.” In connection with this argument, Hyatt asserted that the penalties FTB imposed against Hyatt were done “to better bargain for and position the case to settle.” Hyatt also argued that FTB unfairly refused to correct a mathematical error in the amount assessed against him when FTB asserted that there was no error.

None of these assertions could be made without contesting the audits’ conclusions and determining that they were incorrect, which Hyatt was precluded from doing. Further, excluding FTB’s evidence to rebut the adverse inference was prejudicial because Hyatt relied heavily on the adverse inference, and it is unknown how much weight the jury gave the inference in making its damages findings. The exclusion of evidence concerning Hyatt’s loss of his patent and his federal tax audit, both occurring during the relevant period, relate to whether Hyatt’s emotional distress was caused by FTB’s conduct or one of these other events. As for the jury instruction, Instruction 24 gave the jury permission to consider the audits’ determinations, which the district court had previously precluded it from reaching. As such, all of these errors resulted in prejudice to FTB directly related to the amount of damages Hyatt may be entitled to on his IIED claim. Therefore, a new trial as to the IIED damages is warranted.

Recoverable damages on remand

As addressed above in regard to damages for Hyatt’s fraud claim, we reject FTB’s argument that it should be entitled to Nevada’s statutory cap on damages for government entities under comity principles. Based on our above analysis on this issue, we conclude that providing statutory caps on damages under comity would conflict with our state’s policy interest in providing adequate redress to Nevada citizens. Thus, comity does not require this court to grant FTB such relief. Faulkner v. Univ. of Tenn., 627 So. 2d 362, 366 (Ala. 1992); see also Sam v. Estate of Sam, 134 P.3d 761, 765 (N.M. 2006) (recognizing that a state is not required to extend immunity and comity, and only dictating doing so if it does not contradict the forum state's public policy). As a result, any damages awarded on remand for Hyatt's IIED claim are not subject to any statutory cap on the amount awarded. As to FTB's challenges concerning prejudgment interest in connection with Hyatt's emotional distress damages, these arguments are rendered moot by our reversal of the damages awarded for a new trial and our vacating the prejudgment interest award.

Punitive damages

The final issue that we must address in FTB's appeal is whether Hyatt can recover punitive damages from FTB. The district court allowed the issue of punitive damages to go to the jury, and the jury found in Hyatt's favor and awarded him $250 million.

Punitive damages are damages that are intended to punish a defendant's wrongful conduct rather than to compensate a plaintiff for his or her injuries. Bongiovi v. Sullivan, 122 Nev. 556, 580, 138 P.3d 433, 450 (2006). But "[t]he general rule is that no punitive damages are allowed against a [government entity] unless expressly authorized by statute." Long v. City of Charlotte, 293 S.E.2d 101, 114 (N.C. 1982) (emphasis added). In Nevada, NRS 41.035(1) provides that "[a]n award for damages [against a government entity] in an action sounding in tort ... may not include any amount as exemplary or punitive." Thus, Nevada has not waived its sovereign immunity from suit for such damages.

FTB argues that it is entitled to immunity from punitive damages based on comity because, like Nevada, California law has expressly waived such damages against its government entities. California law provides full immunity from punitive damages for its government agencies. Cal. Gov't Code § 818 (West 2012). Hyatt maintains that punitive damages are available against an out-of-state government entity, if provided for by statute, and Nevada has a statute authorizing such damages—NRS 42.005.¹⁹

NRS 42.005(1) provides that punitive damages may be awarded when a defendant “has been guilty of oppression, fraud or malice, express or implied.” Hyatt acknowledges that punitive damages under NRS 42.005 are not applicable to a Nevada government entity based on NRS 41.035(1), but he contends that because FTB is not a Nevada government agency, the protection against punitive damages for Nevada agencies under NRS 41.035(1) does not apply, and thus, FTB comes within NRS 42.005’s purview. FTB counters by citing a federal district court holding,

Georgia v. City of East Ridge, Tennessee, 949 F. Supp. 1571, 1581 (N.D. Ga. 1996), in which the court concluded that a Tennessee government entity could not be held liable for punitive damages under Georgia state law (which applied to the case) because, even though Georgia law had a statute allowing punitive damages, Georgia did not allow such damages against government entities. Therefore, the court gave the Tennessee government entity the protection of this law. Id.

The broad allowance for punitive damages under NRS 42.005 does not authorize punitive damages against a government entity. Further, under comity principles, we afford FTB the protections of California immunity to the same degree as we would provide immunity to a Nevada government entity as outlined in NRS 41.035(1). Thus, Hyatt's argument that Nevada law provides for the award of punitive damages against FTB is unpersuasive. Because punitive damages would not be available against a Nevada government entity, we hold that under comity principles FTB is immune from punitive damages. We therefore reverse the portion of the district court's judgment awarding punitive damages against FTB.

Costs

Since we reverse Hyatt's judgments on several of his tort causes of action, we must reverse the district court's costs award and remand the costs issue for the district court to determine which party, if any, is the prevailing party based on our rulings. See Bower v. Harrah's Laughlin, Inc., 125 Nev. 470, 494-95, 215 P.3d 709, 726 (2009) (stating that the reversal of costs award is required when this court reverses the underlying judgment); Glenbrook Homeowners Ass'n v. Glenbrook Co., 111 Nev. 909, 922, 901 P.2d 132, 141 (1995) (upholding the district court's determination that neither party was a prevailing party because each party won some issues and lost some issues). On remand, if costs are awarded, the district court should consider the proper amount of costs to award, including allocation of costs as to each cause of action and recovery for only the successful causes of action, if possible. Cf. Mayfield v. Koroghli, 124 Nev. 343, 353, 184 P.3d 362, 369 (2008) (holding that the district court should apportion costs award when there are multiple defendants, unless it is "rendered impracticable by the interrelationship of the claims"); Bergmann v. Boyce, 109 Nev. 670, 675-76, 856 P.2d 560, 563 (1993) (holding that the district court should apportion attorney fees between causes of action that were colorable and those that were groundless and award attorney fees for the groundless claims).

Because this issue is remanded to the district court, we also address FTB's challenges on appeal to the procedure used by the district court in awarding costs. Hyatt moved for costs after trial, which FTB opposed. FTB's opposition revolved in part around its contention that Hyatt failed to properly support his request for costs with necessary documentation as to the costs incurred. The district court assigned the costs issue to a special master. During the process, Hyatt supplemented his request for costs on more than one occasion to provide additional documentation to support his claimed costs. After approximately 15 months of discovery, the special master issued a recommendation to award Hyatt approximately $2.5 million in costs. FTB sought to challenge the special master's recommendation, but the district court concluded that FTB could not challenge the recommendation under the process used, and the court ultimately adopted the special master's recommendation.

FTB argues that Hyatt was improperly allowed to submit, under NRS 18.110, documentation to support the costs he sought after the deadline. This court has previously held that the five-day time limit established for filing a memorandum for costs is not jurisdictional because the statute specifically allows for "such further time as the court or judge may grant" to file the costs memorandum. Eberle v. State ex rel. Nell J. Redfield Trust, 108 Nev. 587, 590, 836 P.2d 67, 69 (1992). In Eberle, this court stated that even if no extension of time was granted by the district court, the fact that it favorably awarded the costs requested demonstrated that it impliedly granted additional time. Id. The Eberle court ruled that this was within the district court's discretion and would not be disturbed on appeal. Id. Based on the Eberle holding, we reject FTB's contention that Hyatt was improperly allowed to supplement his costs memorandum.

FTB also contends that the district court erred when it refused to let FTB file an objection to the master's report and recommendation. The district court concluded that, under NRCP 53(e)(3), no challenge was permitted because there was a jury trial. While the district court could refer the matter to a special master, the district court erroneously determined that FTB was not entitled to file an objection to the special master's recommendation. Although this case was a jury trial, the costs issue was not placed before the jury. Therefore, NRCP 53(e)(2) applied to the costs issue, not NRCP 53(e)(3). NRCP 53(e)(2) specifically provides that “any party may serve written objections” to the master’s report. Accordingly, the district court erred when it precluded FTB from filing its objections. On remand, if the district court concludes that Hyatt is still entitled to costs, the court must allow FTB to file its objections to the report before the court enters a cost award. Based on our reversal and remand of the costs award, and our ruling in this appeal, we do not address FTB’s specific challenges to the costs awarded to Hyatt, as those issues should be addressed by the district court, if necessary, in the first instance.

Hyatt’s cross-appeal

The final issues that we must resolve concern Hyatt’s cross-appeal. In his cross-appeal, Hyatt challenges the district court’s summary judgment ruling that prevented him from seeking economic damages as part of his recovery for his intentional tort claims.

As background, during the first audit, FTB sent letters to two Japanese companies with whom Hyatt had patent-licensing agreements asking the companies for specific dates when any payments were sent to Hyatt. Both companies responded to the letters and provided the requested information. In the district court, Hyatt argued that sending these letters to the Japanese companies was improper because they revealed that Hyatt was being audited by FTB and that he had disclosed the licensing agreements to FTB. Hyatt theorized that he suffered economic damages by losing millions of dollars of potential licensing revenue because he alleges that the Japanese market effectively abandoned him based on the disclosures. FTB moved the district court for summary judgment to preclude Hyatt from seeking economic loss damages, arguing that Hyatt did not have sufficient evidence to present this claim for damages to the jury. The district court agreed and granted FTB summary judgment.

Damages “cannot be based solely upon possibilities and speculative testimony.” United Exposition Serv. Co. v. State Indus. Ins. Sys., 109 Nev. 421, 424, 851 P.2d 423, 425 (1993). This is true regardless of “whether the testimony comes from the mouth of a lay witness or an expert.” Gramanz v. T-Shirts & Souvenirs, Inc., 111 Nev. 478, 485, 894 P.2d 342, 347 (1995) (quoting Advent Sys. Ltd. v. Unisys Corp., 925 F.2d 670, 682 (3d Cir. 1991)). When circumstantial evidence is used to prove a fact, “the circumstances must be proved, and not themselves be presumed.” Horgan v. Indart, 41 Nev. 228, 231, 168 P. 953, 953 (1917); see also Frantz v. Johnson, 116 Nev. 455, 468, 999 P.2d 351, 359 (2000). A party cannot use one inference to support another inference; only the ultimate fact can be presumed based on actual proof of the other facts in the chain of proof. Horgan, 41 Nev. at 231, 168 P. at 953. Thus, “a complete chain of circumstances must be proven, and not left to inference, from which the ultimate fact may be presumed.” Id.

Here, Hyatt argued that as a result of FTB sending letters to the two Japanese companies inquiring about licensing payments, the companies in turn would have notified the Japanese government about FTB investigating Hyatt. Hyatt theorized that the Japanese government would then notify other Japanese businesses about Hyatt being under investigation, with the end result being that the companies would not conduct any further licensing business with Hyatt. Hyatt's evidence to support this alleged chain of events consisted of the two letters FTB sent to the two companies and the fact that the companies responded to the letters, the fact that his licensing business did not obtain any other licensing agreements after the letters were sent, and expert testimony regarding Japanese business culture that was proffered to establish this potential series of events.

Hyatt claims that the district court erroneously ruled that he had to present direct evidence to support his claim for damages, e.g., evidence that the alleged chain of events actually occurred and that other companies in fact refused to do business with Hyatt as a result. Hyatt insists that he had sufficient circumstantial evidence to support his damages, and in any case, asserts that circumstantial evidence alone is sufficient and that causation requirements are less stringent and can be met through expert testimony under the circumstances at issue here. FTB responds that the district court did not rule that direct evidence was required, but instead concluded that Hyatt's evidence was speculative and insufficient. FTB does not contest that damages can be proven through circumstantial evidence, but argues that Hyatt did not provide such evidence. It also argues that there is no different causation standard under the facts of this case.

The issue we must decide is whether Hyatt set forth sufficient circumstantial evidence to support his economic damages claim, or if the evidence he presented was instead either too speculative or failed to create a sufficient question of material fact as to his economic damages. To begin with, we reject Hyatt's contention that reversal is necessary because the district court improperly ruled that direct evidence was mandatory. Hyatt's limited view of the district court's ruling is unavailing.

The ultimate fact that Hyatt seeks to establish through circumstantial evidence, that the downfall of his licensing business in Japan resulted from FTB contacting the two Japanese companies, however, cannot be proven through reliance on multiple inferences—the other facts in the chain must be proven. Here, Hyatt only set forth expert testimony detailing what his experts believed would happen based on the Japanese business culture. No evidence established that any of the hypothetical steps actually occurred. Hyatt provided no proof that the two businesses that received FTB's letters contacted the Japanese government, nor did Hyatt prove that the Japanese government in turn contacted other businesses regarding the investigation of Hyatt. Therefore, Hyatt did not properly support his claim for economic damages with circumstantial evidence. Wood v. Safeway, Inc., 121 Nev. 724, 731, 121 P.3d 1026, 1030-31 (2005) (recognizing that to avoid summary judgment once the movant has properly supported the summary judgment motion, the nonmoving party may not rest upon general allegations and conclusions, but must instead set forth by affidavit or otherwise specific facts demonstrating the existence of a genuine issue of material fact for trial); see NRCP 56(e). Accordingly, summary judgment was proper and we affirm the district court's summary judgment on this issue.

CONCLUSION

Discretionary-function immunity does not apply to intentional and bad-faith tort claims. But while FTB is not entitled to immunity, it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on each of Hyatt's causes of action except for his fraud and IIED claims. As to the fraud claim, we affirm the district court's judgment in Hyatt's favor, and we conclude that the district court's evidentiary and jury instruction errors were harmless. We also uphold the amount of damages awarded, as we have determined that FTB is not entitled to a statutory cap on damages under comity principles because this state's interest in providing adequate relief to its citizens outweighs providing FTB with the benefit of a damage cap under comity. In regard to the IIED claim, we affirm the judgment in favor of Hyatt as to liability, but conclude that evidentiary and jury instruction errors require a new trial as to damages. Any damages awarded on remand are not subject to a statutory cap under comity. We nevertheless hold that Hyatt is precluded from recovering punitive damages against FTB. The district court's judgment is therefore affirmed in part and reversed and remanded in part. We also remand the prejudgment interest and the costs awards to the district court for a new determination in light of this opinion. Finally, we affirm the district court's prior summary judgment as to Hyatt's claim for economic damages on Hyatt's cross-appeal. Given our resolution of this appeal, we do not need to address the remaining arguments raised by the parties on appeal or cross-appeal.
